Power-Struggle Violence Raging

Chinese City Seized By Red Guard Foes

By AP, UPI

TOKYO — Anti-Red Guard forces have taken over the eastern Chinese city of Nanking after bloody battles with China's Red Guard, dispatches from Peking reported today.

They said the city, 530 miles southeast of Peking, is in the grip of terror.

Other dispatches said the power struggle has exploded in a wave of violence, torture and atrocities. Nearly 1,000 Chinese were reported killed or injured in four days of fighting between opposing Red Guards and workers' groups.

Red Guard posters put up in Peking said 54 people were killed, 900 injured and 6,000 arrested in the first major eruption reported since the "cultural revolution" began sweeping China last summer. Czech newsmen stationed in Peking said "fingers, noses and ears of captives were chopped off and their tongues cut out."

The Red Guard posters said the violence was centred in Nanking and near Shanghai and raged for four days starting last Tuesday. An estimated 100,000 were reported involved.

Pravda said several thousand Chinese workers clashed with Red Guards in Anhwei province when they stormed into a building where guards were torturing a member of the Chinese Communist party central committee. The Pravda report said "there were casualties in the clash" but did not report the number.

Terror and Tension

The Peking correspondent of the Czech news agency CTK said "terror reigns in Nanking and the situation is full of tensions. Traffic is paralyzed and telephone communication is interrupted with the rest of the world." Rail service between Nanking and Shanghai was reported suspended.

Other Peking reports said that, in addition to the bloody rioting between factions split over the rule of party chairman Mao Tse-tung, Mao faces opposition from some provincial and "grass roots" officials.

The reports said the first major riots broke out Tuesday in Kiang Su province and resulted in 14 deaths and 400 people injured.

Then on Thursday and Friday, Nanking exploded in more bloody rioting with 40 other deaths and 500 reported "seriously wounded."

The riots disrupted all railway traffic between Peking and Hankow for two days. There was no indication from Peking Saturday whether the rioting had been halted and train service resumed.

The posters indicated the riots were caused by collusion within the ranks of the Nanking "cultural revolution" committee.

Mayor and Others

Japanese reporters said it was believed in Peking the Nanking riots were started on instructions from Tao Chu, former party propaganda chief believed among the first purged last year.

The posters claimed the Red Guard units were led by Litzu Ying, secretary of the committee of Kiang Su province.

Shanghai Mayor Tsao Ti-chiu was held responsible for the clashes in the districts near that city. The posters said the mayor and "a handful of reactionary bourgeois followers plotted the incidents."

The official New China News Agency has made no mention of riots or posters.

Other posters said the Red Guard attempt to criticize publicly Premier Chou En-lai has fizzled out and Mao has admitted making a blunder when he divided the party politburo into two factions.

A Peking-based Kyodo correspondent said Red Guard posters criticizing Chou were torn down and replaced by pro-Chou slogans and posters.

The new banners were posted in the name of the Shanghai Red Guards and warned any attacks against Chou would be crushed by all means.

Blast-torn motel in downtown Las Vegas

Suicide Blast Shreds Motel, Killing Six

LAS VEGAS, Nev. (AP) — A three-storey motel was virtually destroyed Saturday by an apparent suicidal blast that killed six persons and injured eight.

The downtown area was rocked at 1:25 a.m. by an explosion police believe was touched off by someone firing a bullet into dynamite.

Police said the blast centred in Room 214 of the Orbit Inn, registered to a Mr. and Mrs. R. J. Paris of Hollywood, Calif. They were driving a car with Florida licence plates.

CHARRED PISTOL

George Franklin Jr., district attorney, said a charred .25-calibre automatic pistol was found in the alley behind the motel close to a severed human hand. He said two rounds of ammunition of the same calibre were found in the Florida car.

Authorities said a wallet with identification cards issued to R. J. Paris—and containing an Arizona permit to carry explosives—were found in what remained of Room 214. The wallet also contained a California driver's licence.

Franklin said it appeared someone had fired the gun into the dynamite taken to the motel room.

Detective Paul Guias said, however, that no suicide note had been found.

Police found wires in the back seat of the Florida car which they could not explain.

Franklin said this was an indication someone had planned a suicide "probably right in the middle of downtown," then decided to detonate the dynamite in the motel.

If true, this would be the most spectacular suicide yet in this famed gambling resort.

The 73-unit motel, virtually demolished by the blast, is four blocks from a cluster of downtown casinos and two miles from the lavish Las Vegas Strip of gambling resorts.

The dead were not identified immediately.

Three bodies were found in one room, two in another and one in a third. Thirty rooms were occupied at the time and about 60 persons were in the motel.

Hanoi Makes Clear

Conditions For Talks Unaltered

MOSCOW (UPI) — North Vietnam has declared officially it has not altered its conditions for Vietnam talks, Moscow radio said Saturday.

It said the North Vietnam news agency issued the official statement "in order to dispel rumors in the Western press that Hanoi has changed its position."

The United States was reported checking out any possible shift in Hanoi's position through the current visit there by Victor Moore, Canadian representative of the International Control Commission — the body set up by the 1954 Geneva accords to supervise the Vietnam peace.

IN LIGHT OF INTERVIEW

The Moscow broadcast was made in the light of an interview Harrison Salisbury, assistant managing editor of the New York Times, had in Hanoi this past week with North Vietnamese Premier Pham Van Dong.

Salisbury indicated that during the interview, Dong possibly hinted that the four Communist demands for a settlement of the Vietnam war may not necessarily be preconditions for peace negotiations.

MAIN POINTS

Moscow radio said the Hanoi explanation of North Vietnam's stand "bases itself on the four-point program which was reaffirmed earlier in the week by Prime Minister Pham Van Dong in an interview with Harrison Salisbury . . ."

Moscow radio said the two "main points" of the Hanoi government demands are:

- An unconditional and immediate stop to the American bombing of North Vietnam.
- The withdrawal of U.S. forces from South Vietnam.

The Communists also demand that the Viet Cong be recognized as the legitimate representatives of the South Vietnamese people and that the people be allowed to decide their own future, including reunification of the two nations.

FLIES TO HANOI

Meanwhile, highly informed sources said Victor Moore, chairman of the Canadian delegation to the three-nation ICC, has flown to Hanoi from Saigon to sound out the North Vietnamese leadership and attempt to clarify recent statements attributed to them.

The ICC said Moore's trip to Hanoi was just a farewell visit because he will be leaving his post shortly but it was understood that he actually made the trip at the behest of American authorities.

(In Ottawa, however, a spokesman for the external affairs department also said Moore was simply paying a "farewell visit" to Hanoi because his ICC appointment expires at the end of the month. The spokesman said such a trip was "normal" under the circumstances and "there is no-

SIX BODIES FOUND IN LAKE

COLUMBUS, Ohio (AP)—The bodies of a woman and five of eight children missing since Tuesday morning were recovered Saturday from a car which had plunged into the 30-foot Hoover Reservoir near here.

Search for the bodies of the other three children was suspended temporarily Saturday afternoon due to the depth of the water, low temperature and strong winds.

The victims were listed by authorities as Mary Helen Rutherford, 41, of Delaware; her four children, Delores Ann, 18; Bertie Marie, 15; Steven Franklin, 12; Mary Jane, 5; and her two sets of twin nieces, Karen Sue and Sharon Lou, 20 months, and Lisa Ann and Teresa Lynn, 10 months.

Mrs. Rutherford and the children were last seen Tuesday morning when they left for Columbus, where she planned to buy shoes for the children.

Mrs. Rutherford's husband, Charles, reported them missing early Wednesday, but it was not until Thursday that engineers discovered the broken guardrail beside a country road about 30 feet from a reservoir bridge.

Cong Vanish Before Delta Sweep

SAIGON (AP)—U.S. Marines continued to meet only token sniper resistance today as they pushed through mud and mangrove swamps of the Mekong Delta on the third day of a campaign that could make this the bloodiest year of the Vietnamese war.

SEVENTH RAID

Far to the north, U.S. headquarters reported a Marine patrol suffered heavy casualties when it detonated a large land mine 11 miles northwest of Hue. The size of the patrol was not divulged. The term heavy casualties usually means that a unit has been put out of action.

In air activity, long-range B-52 bombers pounded a suspected Viet Cong headquarters before dawn today in the seventh raid in three days against Communist positions menacing Saigon from the north. They struck in Binh Duong Province 28 miles northwest of the capital.

U.S. headquarters said most air raids over North Vietnam on Saturday were confined to the southern panhandle and the Dien Bien Phu area. Poor flying conditions restricted air strikes everywhere.

COPTER LOST

Headquarters reported that a Marine cargo helicopter was shot down by enemy ground fire Saturday 27 miles southwest of Da Nang. The chopper was on a resupply mission. Headquarters said there were no casualties and the supplies were recovered. It was the third U.S. helicopter lost to enemy action Saturday and raised the total lost in the war to 254.

OUT OF MAINSTREAM

In the massive sweep by U.S. Marines and Vietnamese through the waist-deep vehicle-miring swamps of the Mekong Delta, headquarters reported enemy casualties so far as three killed and five captured. Allied casualties were termed light.

The heavily populated delta, with mangrove thickets and rice paddies laced by 25,000 navigable miles of waterways, has been out of the martial mainstream because of the prospect that sharp action against indi-

Medical March Protests War

NEW YORK (AP) — Three hundred doctors, nurses, researchers and personnel from the medical profession demonstrated Saturday against the war in Vietnam.

The protesters encircled the Bellevue Hospital compound, between 26th and 30th streets on First Avenue.

The demonstration was held to protest the amount of money spent on the war and what pickets described as a lack of money spent for medical research, improvement of public health facilities and better wages.

The protest was sponsored by the New York Medical Committee to End the War in Vietnam.

March B.C. Tory Meet To Elect New Leaders

VANCOUVER (CP) — The B.C. Progressive Conservative Association will elect a new leader and president at its annual convention opening March 4, president Stuart Fleming said Saturday.

Mr. Fleming said the party would also line up possible candidates for the next federal and provincial elections.

The party has been without a leader since E. Davie Fulton resigned two years ago to return to federal politics. It does not have representation in the B.C. legislature.

Chinese Spurn U.S. Cheques

Baker Faces Tax, Theft Charges

WASHINGTON (AP) — Bobby Baker, who built a fortune while he worked as secretary to the U.S. Senate's Democratic majority, goes to trial Monday on charges of tax evasion, theft and conspiracy.

The possible consequences of conviction—48 years in prison and $47,000 in fines—are far greater than the denunciation the Senate rules committee gave him in 1965.

Guesses on the length of the Baker trial run to three months.

The 38-year-old former confidante of many Democratic senators, including the then majority leader Lyndon B. Johnson, was indicted a year ago by a federal grand jury following a 15-month investigation. He has pleaded not guilty.

Baker came to the Senate as a knickers-wearing 14-year-old page boy from Pickens, S.C. He became majority secretary in 1955 and served in this important behind-the-scenes post until October, 1963, when he resigned under fire. He is charged with:

- Filing false income tax returns for 1961 and 1962, understating his income by $54,558.91 and evading more than $23,000 in taxes for those years.
- Committing felonious

Imports Soar Before Law?

Dowding Probes Cycle Lid 'Leak'

VANCOUVER (CP) — New Democrat MLA Gordon Dowding said Friday he is investigating an allegation that large numbers of motorcycle safety helmets were imported into British Columbia just before legislation making them compulsory was passed.

Mr. Dowding said he is concerned about the allegation which is contained in a brief being sent to all MLAs.

Wayne Edwards, 27-year-old heavy equipment operator who drew up the brief, hints at government corruption in the matter.

In an interview, Mr. Edwards said he is seeking proof through the trade and commerce department that there was a sharp rise in the number of helmets being imported just prior to the legislation July 1, 1965.

"It certainly was not common knowledge among MLAs," said Mr. Dowding.

Danger from China Brings Soviet Shift

By HENRY S. BRASHER

MOSCOW (AP) — An important shift in Soviet policy has occurred. Signs indicated it means an increasingly serious view of possible danger from China.

Secrecy so far veils the new policy line. But things here and there—newspaper articles and words from Communist sources—show that China is preying on Kremlin minds as a potential threat.

And as China gets more attention, Vietnam gets less. Vietnam is a relatively static problem some distance away. China an explosively turbid problem along the Soviet Union's longest border.

The fact of an important shift in policy by the Soviet Communist party, which sets the government's policies, was published Saturday in the party newspaper Pravda in an indirect way.

In an article scheduled for publication in Sunday's Pravda, the toughness of policy toward China was indicated by a caustic report on "some new zigzags of the 'great proletarian cultural revolution'."

The article, Tass, the Soviet news agency reported, says the "new zigzags are attended by a still more widely spread anti-Soviet campaign, unbridled propaganda of the great-power, anti-Leninist course of Mao Tse tung and his group, which runs counter to the fundamental interests of the Chinese people."

NEWS ITEM

The indirect confirmation of an important policy shift came in a news item on the front page of Saturday's Pravda.

Pravda reported that in recent days, seven party leaders had briefed regional party officials across European Russia and into Siberia and a China border region of Soviet Central Asia. Earlier, two top party men, Leonid I. Brezhnev and Mikhail A. Suslov, gave briefings in Moscow and Leningrad.

The subject was the Dec. 12-13 secret meetings of the party's central committee and the speech Brezhnev made to it.

NOT PUBLIC

The speech was not made public after the meeting, meaning it was a hot item politically. The committee resolution following it, however, said the great power "anti-Soviet policy of Mao Tse-tung and his group has entered a new, dangerous stage." It said the meeting had found it necessary to expose the wayward course "of the present Chinese leaders, to step up the struggle in defence of Marxism-Leninism."

Details of the danger, of how to expose and to step up the struggle, were not given publicly. They are the underlying policy.

In fact, some analysts here say, a shift on China became apparent in a Pravda editorial Nov. 27. It was the strongest denunciation of Mao's group in years. It held out for the first time the suggestion that the Soviet Union was backing Mao's opponents in the Chinese power struggle.

About the same time, informed sources said, semi-public meetings were being held to spread the party word about tensions on the China border. The meetings were intended to alert the public to the existence of a possible future enemy.

On Dec. 28 the defence ministry newspaper Red Star revealed the other side of this coin. It published a long editorial saying the Chinese army was being taught that the Soviet Union was the enemy.

Air Net Down

OTTAWA (CP) — The net income after taxes of Canada's six major air carriers was cut in the first six months of 1966 to less than one-third of their income in the same period of 1965, the Dominion Bureau of Statistics says — from $1,903,020 to $578,634.

Grateful Goose Repays

MEMPHIS, Tenn. (AP) — A goose that just missed being cooked routed a burglar Saturday.

"He's the best watchdog I ever had," said Nan Key Merkt, 72.

The goose charged out into the yard with loud honks early Saturday when it heard a burglar breaking the lock on the rear door of the Merkt home.

The burglar fled before police arrived.

Mrs. Merkt said she bought the goose for a holiday dinner but decided not to kill it when her invited guests couldn't come.

Direct Election of U.S. President

Bold Voting Step Urged

WASHINGTON (LAT) — A special commission of the American Bar Association has taken the historic and bold step of calling for direct popular election of the U.S. president and vice-president.

In a report released Saturday, the commission advocated abolishing the 177-year-old electoral college and adding a constitutional amendment to let the people vote directly for the two top officers.

The proposal drew immediate favorable response from Capitol Hill. Senate minority leader Everett Dirksen was described as impressed and an associate said it was conceivable Dirksen might sponsor a constitutional amendment.

In addition, Sen. Birch Bayh (D-Ind.), Chairman of the Senate judiciary subcommittee on constitutional amendments, announced he will offer an amendment when the new Congress convenes Tuesday.

Bayh, principal author of the projected 25th amendment dealing with presidential inability that now is before the states for ratification, became a convert last year to the cause for direct popular election of the president and vice-president.

His subcommittee conducted a series of hearings on various proposals to revise the electoral college but took no action. Bayh said there will be a new round of hearings this year.

In 1965 and last year, President Johnson called for a constitutional amendment that would abolish the office of elector but retain the electoral vote system.

However, the ABA special commission found even that reform measure insufficient, saying: "The electoral college method of electing a president of the United States is archaic, undemocratic, complex, ambiguous, indirect and dangerous."

● Conspiring with associate Wayne L. Bromley and former lieutenant-governor Clifford Jones of Nevada to conceal the nature, purpose and recipient of payments made by five companies, seemingly Bromley but actually to Baker.

The Senate rules committee accused Baker June 30, 1965, of using "the political influence of his public office to feather his own nest."

MOST FLAGRANT

The committee, which had a Democratic majority, concluded ater a stormy investigation that one $5,000 payment to Baker from a lawyer representing a firm which sought a specific law was "for Baker's help in getting the law passed."

It called this case "the most flagrant of all Baker's activities in the use of his office and the prestige of his position for his personal financial profit."

Viet Cong Fade in Delta

genous Viet Cong bands would mean heavy civilian casualties. It's hard for even a native to distinguish guerrillas from peaceful pyjama-clad peasants.

But the delta has been a heartland for the Communists for 20 years and now Americans are joining Vietnamese troops in an effort to crush guerrilla bands estimated to total 100,000 men. Vietnamese efforts over the years had led but to a stalemate negating hard - won gains farther north.

The Viet Cong's extensive delta organization feeds large quantities of men, supplies and money to Red units in other parts of the country. The rice harvest is on now in the delta and Viet Cong tax agents are levying grain from the peasants in areas the Communists control.

Swamp mud and water initially proved a greater obstacle than the Viet Cong for the American Marines, who in company with Vietnamese marines, are making the first big American thrust into the delta. Eight vehicles had to be towed out.

An American installation just outside Pleiku was attacked by the Communists for the second time in 24 hours Saturday.

Camp Holloway was hit by two rounds of mortar fire and two rounds of small arms fire in the latest attack. Earlier, a heavy mortar barrage and ground assault caused heavy damage to a supply area and lighter damage to a helicopter airfield. U.S. casualties were termed light.

Elsewhere in South Vietnam, a U.S. military truck carrying three American servicemen was fired on by a force of unknown size 16 miles northwest of Saigon. All three Americans were killed.

thing in the nature of a peace feeler about it."

The Americans have discreetly used ICC channels on several occasions previously for indirect contacts with Hanoi.

One thing the Americans wanted immediate clarification of was remarks Dong made to Salisbury during the interview that may indicate a new turn in Communist peace talk conditions.

India and Poland are the other two member-nations of the ICC which has officers stationed in both North and South Vietnam.

Goitre Unlikely to Impair Hearing

Your Good Health

By JOSEPH MOLNER, MD

Dear Dr. Molner: What are the symtoms of a goitre? Does it impair hearing? Is there difficulty in swallowing, or seeming to be unable to get a full breath of air? Does it cause phlegm? If caught in the early stages, can it be treated without surgery?—MRS. O. T.

Impairment of hearing is most unlikely but the other symptoms can occur.

Goitre is an enlargement of the thyroid gland in the neck, but there are different types: It may show swelling mainly on one side, or on both; it may be nodular or smooth; it can be toxic or non-toxic; the swelling may be just in the neck, or some of it may be out of sight below the upper part of the breast bone.

The swelling can impinge on the esophagus, or gullet, giving a sense of difficulty in swallowing. It may also exert pressure on the windpipe, interfering somewhat with breathing, and causing irritation and hence phlegm in the throat.

A non-toxic goitre may cause no symptom except a bulge. A toxic goitre, though usually presents such severe symptoms (extreme nervousness, rapid heart beat, loss of weight, excessive sweating, possibly prominence of the eyeballs) that the patient loses no time in going to his doctor.

Usually large goitres have to be removed surgically both because of size and annoying symptoms. Some types of goitre, however, can be controlled and slightly reduced in size by medication.

In doubtful cases, medication may be tried for a time to see whether it promises success; in severe cases it is usually best to go right ahead with surgery without wasting time.

Dear Dr. Molner: Would there be any harm in using toothpaste to clean the teeth of my 14-month-old daughter? Would it be too strong for her, or for her teeth?—MRS. M. C.

No, no harm to teeth or to the child, and you are establishing a useful habit. Anyway, you need only a little bit of toothpaste.

If I'm wrong in this answer — but I don't think so — I'll promptly hear from dentists, and will tell you what they say.

A little smitch of toothpaste, if swallowed, won't do any harm, and won't harm the teeth.

Dear Dr. Molner: Is it true that parsley and garlic pills are good for controlling high blood pressure?—P.G.

No, in spite of all the old tales.

First Manchester Glimpse

It's a Superb Book

By ROBERT DONOVAN

WASHINGTON (LAT) — The first glimpse of William Manchester's heralded work on the Kennedy assassination portrays it as a superb retelling of a well-known story.

It is the quality of the narrative, the boldness of the author's judgments and his penetrating and often biting characterizations of men and events that is paramount, not the much publicized "scoops."

In the first of four parts of The Death of a President in Look magazine, released to the press Saturday, here is really not a great deal that had not already been known about the tragedy. More new material doubtless will appear in future installments and in the book, scheduled for publication in April.

But judging by the first installment, the story is told with such skill and penetration that even though it is a familiar one it seems fresh, vivid, clear.

This is not to say there are no new details. There are, particularly, incidents and conversations between President and Mrs. Kennedy. It is certainly news, for instance, that Mrs. Kennedy took an intense dislike to Gov. John Connally when she reached Texas with her husband on the fateful trip. "I can't stand him all day," she told the president.

Indeed, Mr. Connally emerges as a most unappealing figure, and Manchester makes no effort to conceal his loathing for Dallas. He goes far beyond the Warren commission by suggesting the city's "disease of the spirit" conditioned the state of mind of Lee Oswald.

Oswald Only One

On the other hand, this first installment up to the eve of the assassination implies Manchester agrees with the Warren commission that Oswald was the sole assassin. The book therefore may have to endure the tirades of those who believe there was a conspiracy.

Nothing in the first installment at least should seem offensive to President Johnson. Of course the advance publicity about the book's detraction of Mr. Johnson pertained to the trip back from Dallas after the assassination. Hence, later installments may yet have the White House in a rage.

In the first installment, Manchester sympathizes with Mr. Johnson's political problem in Texas. The problem was that the conservative Democrats headed by Mr. Connally were in a brawl with the Liberal Democrats led by fromer Senator Ralph Yarborough. It was to help smooth over this squabble that Mr. Kennedy agreed to go to Texas.

He did not want to go, and Manchester said that "it appeared to him that Johnson ought to be able to resolve this petty dispute himself." Nevertheless, Manchester felt that "Johnson's problems were authentic."

Thus it is not Mr. Johnson but Mr. Connally who comes off badly in this account. The Texas governor is depicted as a money-conscious schemer who was constantly spinning wheels.

One result was, according to Manchester, that the Trade Mart was chosen as the place for the president to speak in Dallas rather than the Women's Building because the Trade Mart better suited a Connally scheme for humiliating Yarborough.

Throughout History

But by heading for the Trade Mart the presidential motorcade passed the Texas School Book Depository and Oswald.

Naturally Manchester does not blame Mr. Connally, who was to be seriously wounded himself, for what happened. But if this book is to become the definitive work on the subject, Mr. Connally's name will be unpleasantly associated with the assassination throughout history.

Perhaps the boldest judgment Manchester makes is in setting the almost precise moment at which Oswald went totally insane or, in the author's words, suffered "the total eclipse of his reason."

This occurred, Manchester wrote, "shortly before 9 p.m." on the night before the assassination while the president and Mrs. Kennedy were still in Fort Worth. What caused "the breaking point" was the final rejection of the "paranoic" Oswald by his wife Marina.

No one will ever be able to know Oswald's exact mental condition, and experts may question how Manchester can be so precise in describing its processes. In another context he had said that "legitimate speculation is one of the duties of historians."

Obviously he is performing this duty in trying to penetrate Oswald. His speculations come through in convincing fashion, and Manchester's characterization of Oswald is about as good as the world is ever likely to get.

Indeed, if the entire book measures up to the first installment it will be a superior work.

Presumed Dead

Driver Flees Scene Of Two-Bus Crash

MANILA (UPI) — The national police reported Sunday that one of the bus drivers involved in history's worst traffic tragedy was not killed in the accident as originally believed but survived with minor injuries and fled the scene.

The Philippine national police launched a manhunt for the driver, identified as Lolito de Castro, who was reported spotted in Batangas province.

Capt. Efren Bithia, a police intelligence officer, said, "We expect to get him momentarily."

84 DEAD

De Castro was reported to have perished with 84 Filipinos, mostly children and their parents, when two buses collided Friday and plunged into a 150-foot ravine 30 miles south of Manila. The other driver was killed instantly. Sixty other persons were injured.

Police believe de Castro survived the crash because the bus he was driving landed on its rear.

The manhunt was launched as church bells in rural towns tolled in mourning for the victims.

TWO BUSLOADS

The victims, two busloads of Roman Catholic pilgrims, were on their way to the shrine of the Miraculous Infant Jesus in a modern-day re-enactment of the journey of the Three Wise Men when tragedy struck on a narrow, zigzag road.

The dead, including entire families wiped out in the accident, were moved to their home towns for funeral services. Doctors and nurses, including those rushed to the scene from Manila, looked after the badly-bruised survivors of the tragedy who were brought to nearby clinics and hospitals.

The two buses that crashed were part of a 57-bus caravan.

President Ferdinand E. Marcos ordered top officials to the scene to extend all available aid to the victims and their families.

Medical Error Deadly

CHARLEROI (AP)—A heart drug mistakenly administered to cancer sufferers in a Charleroi hospital has caused patient deaths, the hospital announced Saturday.

It did not say how many deaths there were but the Belgian news agency Belga said "the number of victims appears to be rather high" and the Brussels newspaper Derniere Heure quoted unofficial reports as saying there were 20 dead.

WRONG LABEL

A communique of the Arthur Gailly Medicochirurgical Institute in Charleroi said the drug digitalin was mistakenly labelled by a Belgian pharmaceutical firm and doctors used it on their patients in the belief it was a drug containing hormone for treatment of prostate cancer. It normally is used as a tonic for cardiac patients.

Normal dosage of digitalin is one to three milligrams a day. The hormone preparation is administered at the rate of up to 10 milligrams three times a day.

DRUG SERVICE

Said the hospital communique: "Doctors progressively noticed a coincidence between the condition of some patients and absorption of a drug supplied by a big Brussels pharmaceutical firm and delivered by the drug service of the hospital.

"These clinical presumptions led doctors to suspend administration of the drug. Since then, investigations established that the supplier had made a mistake with fatal consequences."

The firm was not identified. Informed sources said the drug was used from March 1965 to last April.

Power and Progress

THE REPORT THAT "three-river" power is closer" for B.C. may be misleading to some newspaper readers.

The reference, of course, is to the development of hydro resources on the Liard at a point close to the confluence with the Nelson, a site, it is estimated, which will have a capacity of 3,000,000 kilowatts.

But so far the only significant step towards achievement of this potential is the announcement by the government that tenders for exploratory drilling are being studied with a view to ascertaining whether it is practical to plan an earth-fill dam on the Liard similar to the monster on the Peace.

However, it is perfectly true to say that the B.C. Hydro and Power Authority is currently at work on the three-river concept, since Portage Mountain on the Peace is scheduled to come into production of its 2,300,000 kilowatts of energy in 1968 and, on the Columbia, the Mica Creek generation of another 2,000,000 kilowatts is due in 1973, with extensive storage dams controlling the flow above it.

The Hydro Authority has said that its projected production barely keeps up with anticipated demand, in spite of the energy promised from the Columbia and Peace, so it is perfectly possible this province will see an accelerated program on the Liard, swelling the total of hydro-electric energy in this province to the neighborhood of 8,000,000 kilowatts when the latter project is completed.

This total is arrived at by including the present generating systems on Vancouver Island and the mainland which, with thermal generation, provide in excess of 2,044,000 kilowatts.

This province has moved rapidly in the power field ever since the B.C. Power Commission, under the chairmanship of Mr. S. R. Weston, established the publicly-owned system in January, 1945.

The B.C. Power Corporation and other privately-owned operations had grown over the years, but it was felt that rural electrification was lagging in the province and it was to remedy this lack that the commission was set up.

It worked swiftly to meet the need, originally taking over 13,000 customers of small utilities, and by 1958—at the time of the royal commission inquiry into the operation—it was serving more than 75,000, with an average of only 16 customers per transmission mile.

Its development of the Campbell River system on Vancouver Island made possible the rapid expansion of the forest industry here.

Then, in March, 1962, the government of Mr. W. A. C. Bennett expropriated the profitable and extensive B.C. Electric system, and established the present Hydro Authority, thus creating a province-wide utility grid.

Today this operation embraces a plant investment of more than $227,000,000, produces a gross revenue of over $160,000,000 annually, serves more than 1.6 million people in 630 communities.

With completion of the Columbia and Peace projects it will become one of the revenue-producing giants of the country, with such mighty resources as those represented on the Liard still to be developed.

It is certain the old B.C. Power Commission's slogan that "Power Means Progress' has been fully and conclusively proved.

Boss Pearson

THE RETURN OF Walter Gordon to cabinet rank has all the earmarks of an exercise in personal power by the prime minister.

Certainly there can be no doubt in political minds that the standing of the Liberal government has much improved over the past few months due almost entirely to the reduced effectiveness of the Conservative party as an Opposition force.

However, what has largely been overlooked by many is how much Mr. Pearson's own position has been strengthened within his own party over the same period for the same reason.

Shortly after the last election which was almost as disastrous for the Liberals as it was for the Conservatives, Mr. Pearson let it be known at first privately and later publicly that he would be willing to step down if an acceptable successor could be found.

Even as recently as the Tory "Dump Diefenbaker" convention Mr. Pearson's grip on the Liberal leadership seemed but a tenuous thing open to speculative challenge by political pundits of every hue.

Yet today Mr. Pearson appears to believe that he has gained the whip hand within his own party and is obviously willing to use it by going against the advice of many of the Liberal stalwarts through reinstating Mr. Gordon to a senior and responsible post in his cabinet.

What the prime minister hopes to accomplish by his latest move is not yet clear. But whatever else he may do he has at least succeeded in establishing precisely who is boss in the Grit establishment today.

Water Rates

THE FACT MADE KNOWN at a council meeting that Oak Bay has had many letters inquiring about a reduction in water rates is indicative of a suspicion that the municipality is going to benefit from this year's lower charges and that its residents, its customers, somehow are not. The same situation no doubt prevails in the other Greater Victoria municipalities, where many householders, noting that the wholesale rate from the water board has been cut from 12 to 10 cents a thousand gallons, will want to see a similar reduction in their water bills.

Reeve Allan Cox of Oak Bay has said frankly that the rebate may not get to the customers. And in his municipality, as well as Saanich and Victoria, this should not make much difference to the residents, for a municipal profit is their profit. If the municipality has a surplus on this account, it is just so much less for them to pay in taxes. Selling water, moreover, is a rather equitable way of raising revenue.

But there is an exception in the case of Esquimalt, where the water is distributed and sold to the consumer by Victoria city. Since any profit on the sale of water in Esquimalt would be only to the city taxpayers' advantage, here is a case where, in fairness, the reduction surely should be passed straight along to the user.

"We can't go round thinking everybody riding a horse has escaped from Dartmoor in disguise, Madam."

Power Shift

Britain Quits The Med

By Brig. Gen. JAMES D. HITTLE

A POWER shift of historical importance is taking place in the Mediterranean world.

This is what is happening. British sea power has virtually disappeared from the Mediterranean. Russian sea power is replacing it. As the British sail out of these historic and strategic waters, the Russian fleet units sail in.

This marks a shift in the world power equation that is difficult to overestimate. For centuries there was good strategic reason to refer to the Mediterranean as a "British Lake."

It was no accident of history that originally put a British fleet on Mediterranean station. British statesmen realized control of that vast inland sea controlled much of the Mideast, the northern rim of Africa, and the southern shores of Europe. With the opening of the Suez Canal, the Mediterranean became a major link in the "lifeline of the Empire."

Today, Persian Gulf oil, so important to the peacetime economy and wartime survival of Europe, makes the Mediterranean a lifeline of the free world.

Now, as in the past, the security of Europe is dependant on the control of its Mediterranean sea flank.

But the British weren't the only ones who realized the key strategic role of the Mediterranean. Russia also knew it. From the days of the early Varangian kings, pre-dating the Romanoffs, Russian ambition to be a Mediterranean power has never wavered.

So, today, the Russian fleet in the Mediterranean pointedly symbolizes the realization of a 1,000-year-old Russian dream.

The free world should realize that it is no token force the Kremlin has in the Mediterraneam.

European sources told me that this Russian fleet currently consists of two missile frigates, destroyers, submarines, a tanker, supply ships and several electronic surveillance ships.

These last are the large high-seas trawler types that so frequently shadow naval activities throughout the world.

Also, from time to time, a sleek Soviet Sverdlov class cruiser moves into the Mediterranean and joins the Kremlin's fleet.

Estimating the number of Russian subs in the Mediterranean is a constant problem. Observers can sight and total up the exact number making the necessary surface passage of the Turkish straits between the Mediterranean and the Black Sea. But, because of the depth and width of the Gibraltar straits, we can't tell how many Russian subs sneak submerged into the Mediterranean from the Atlantic. So, we really don't know how many are in the Mediterranean at a given time.

Fortunately, the Kremlin Mediterranean fleet doesn't match the power of the U.S. Sixth Fleet in these waters. But that is little real consolation.

With this fleet the Kremlin has dealt itself into the Mediterranean high stakes poker game. Thus, Russia has broken the West's monopoly of control over these waters.

With the British out of and the Russians in the Mediterranean, things will never be quite the same — or as secure — along the North Atlantic Treaty Organization's southern flank.

War's Greatest General

Zhukov Finally Restored As a Hero of His Country

By PETER WORTHINGTON from Moscow

EARLY in December a tiny, two-inch item appeared on an inside page of Pravda, announcing that one G. K. Zhukov had been awarded the Order of Lenin on the occasion of his 70th birthday.

It was a routine item which one could glance at and forget — except the person in question was Marshal Georgi Konstantinovich Zhukov, Russia's hero-commander of the Second World War and the man who, more than anyone else, was the architect who fashioned the military defeat of Hitler's legions.

It's now the full cycle for Zhukov — again.

Now he is officially restored to a pedestal of honor, after being twice condemned to oblivion: Once by Stalin, again by Khrushchev.

Zhukov's story is unique.

He is probably the greatest general of his world war — and possibly the outstanding field commander since Napoleon.

Without Zhukov Russia would probably have lost the war. Certainly Leningrad would have fallen, and not held out under siege for two and one-half years, during which one-third of its population — 1,000,000 people — died from starvation and shelling.

Moscow would probably have fallen in the fall and winter of 1941, and Stalingrad might not have been the resounding triumph that it was.

Zhukov was responsible for all these victories, and more. He was the man behind most of the awesome successes of the Red Army.

And now he is back to full rehabilitation in the twilight years of his life.

The restoration of this genuine wartime hero came, appropriately, at a time when Moscow was in the throes of celebrating the 25th anniversary of the Battle of Moscow.

Today Zhukov is no longer a "force" in Soviet affairs, and therefore no longer a threat. Though he was responsible, largely, for Khrushchev winning the seat of power, it was this same Khrushchev who banished him soon after winning all the Kremlin marbles.

Zhukov was too strong a personality, and was apparently trying to commit Communist heresy — to purge the Red Army of party control.

Though Soviet history books during the past 20 years have attempted to downgrade Zhukov's feats of command in the war, they haven't entirely succeeded. Even the magnificent talent for distortion and omission that Soviet historians (called historiography here!) specialize in, couldn't obscure or expunge Zhukov's name entirely.

Especially when every man, woman and child in Russia knows the name, and realizes that he is the one who turned what seemed certain defeat into ultimate victory.

One of the parlor games of the West is arguing who was the greatest general of the war. We all have our favorites and our biases and prejudices. The Montgomery fans debate with the MacArthur followers and Alexander, Wavell, Patton, Stillwell, Slim, Wingate, Auchinleck, even de Gaulle, are inevitably mentioned; along with such "enemy" commanders as Rommel and Guderian.

Though details of his career are less known in the West, the evidence indicates that Zhukov overshadows them all.

Without going into specifics, Zhukov saved Leningrad in the fall of 1941 when the city was ready to collapse in panic and hysteria. With the Germans at the gate, the old Bolshevik hero and former defence minister, Kliment Voroshilov, was in charge of Leningrad defence. He botched the job.

In 1943 Zhukov broke the back of the German army in the key battle of the war — the Battle of the Kursk Salient.

It was Hitler's final gamble to take Moscow, and turned into the mightiest, most deadly tank battle in history. Zhukov had defences up to 30 miles in depth, and lured the Germans to attack.

They tried a north-south pincher thrust that plunged 10 and 30 miles into the Red lines — but was still 100 miles short of meeting.

Some 3,000 German tanks were said to have been destroyed, along with 2,000 planes and 80,000 German soldiers — all in three days. The German retreat to Berlin was on . . . they never recovered from the staggering losses at Kursk while the Red Army's resilience was phenomenal.

It was Zhukov, competing with his old rival Marshal Ivan Koniev, who was the hero of the capture of Berlin — a battle that, despite the ragged state of German morale at the time, still cost the lives of 100,000 Russian soldiers.

In the closing days of the war he became friends with General Eisenhower, and seemed to enjoy and admire Allied soldiers.

By the war's end Zhukov's popularity outshone Stalin's — so he was banished in 1946 and his name became an unmentionable. His role in war histories was methodically downgraded.

After Stalin's death when Khrushchev was a wheeler-dealer, Zhukov became a member of the Presidium. When K faced his moment of peril in 1957 when Malenkov, Molotov and Kaganovich tried to oust him, Zhukov came to his aid and used the army to tip the balance in his favor.

But, after K made him minister of defence, Zhukov proved impossible. He was determined to rid the army of party domination (a parallel could be made to MacArthur in Korea) and K banished him.

Zhukov was accused of having a "Napoleon" complex — possibly correctly.

What sort of a person was — or rather, is — Zhukov?

Tough. A short, stocky, square-faced man with a deceptively gentle manner, he was born into a peasant family near Moscow.

He fought in the Czar's army as a private in the First World War, and what's more, he was four times decorated for bravery and initiative.

In 1919 he joined the Bolsheviks in the Civil War and his courage, rather than his leadership qualities, earned him a commission. He began to get "educated" and graduated from the Frunze military academy in 1931 — at the age of 35.

Zhukov was worshipped by his troops — and feared by his officers. He was inclined to be lenient towards privates. So long as they fought hard, he was prepared to overlook minor breaches.

With his officers he was an iron disciplinarian. It became an enormous honor and a nervous responsibility to serve on his staff.

His place is in history, and Soviet historians have done a disservice to military annals by attempting to tarnish the record. There has been nothing quite like him in this century.

Guns No Priority

Mexican Emphasis On Books

By HAROLD Y. JONES from Mexico City

THE Mexican government is training its heaviest guns on two of its biggest problems: illiteracy and poverty.

In 1967, the government will spend $462 million on education — four times as much as on national defence and about 10 per cent of the entire budget, which is $4,442,000,000.

Mexico's military, whose major mission is to maintain internal order, takes a back seat when the development-minded government passes out budget funds each year, unlike the military in other Latin American countries.

In all, the army, air force and navy will be allocated $110 million during 1967, including funds to run the relatively small group of military industries.

In Mexico, it is not a question of guns or butter. It is a question of butter and books.

The government deems illiteracy to be at the root of poverty and it is determined to teach every peasant, adults as well as children, to read and write. That's why the ministry of education gets the most money.

Education can surely use it. The national literacy rate, according to United Nations figures, is 57 per cent. The country has a deficit of 60,000 schoolteachers and the number will increase as the population, now 42 million, increases.

In 1964, the number of grade school children surpassed 7 million for the first time but there were only 137,000 teachers for them while 207,000 were needed.

Primary schoolteachers are overworked. Each has about 55 pupils per class. The ideal figure is considered to be 30.

President Gustavo Diaz Ordaz, in an effort to beef up the teacher force, ordered that about $3.5 million of education's budget go to pay hikes for teachers to make the profession more attractive.

The government directed that $198 million go to primary education, $56 million to secondary education and $60 million to universities and technical and professional institutes.

The government also directed that $63 million go to construction of classrooms, which are badly needed, particularly in rural areas where barely three out of every 100 youngsters finish the sixth grade.

Those who do manage to keep going to school are supplied free textbooks and workbooks by the federal government. The plan is costly but, the government thinks, worth it.

Since the plan was started, the government has given out 181.5 million books. By 1970, about 60 million more will have been distributed, at an estimated cost to the government of 17 cents per book.

Along with increased spending on education, the Diaz Ordaz administration is pushing development of industry and agriculture, as much to create jobs for idle peasants as to supply other sectors of the country's fast-growing economy.

The government also is spending more than $500 million on the "infrastructure" needed to help develop the rural areas — items like dams, irrigation systems, electric power, farm-to-market roads and a variety of other public works.

In the years that it will take to build these things, the hope is that Mexico will become a literate nation (that is, with 95 per cent of its people able to read and write), the better to help — and enjoy — its own development.

Hunters Eluded

Hanoi's Secret Fleet

By LAJOS LEDERER from London

THE North Vietnamese high command is moving its supplies by night — in thousands of small boats and barges which carry up to 20 tons. They travel down the coast under cover of darkness, hugging the bays and inlets and moving from one makeshift port to another.

This tough operation is Hanoi's answer to American bombing of the conventional supply routes in North Vietnam.

It comes in a graphic report from Ladislav Mnacko, a Czech novelist and journalist who was once purged for his anti-Stalinist writings. When Prague rehabilitated Mnacko a few years ago they allowed him to travel abroad to collect material for a new book.

He arrrived in North Vietnam in December, 1966, and managed to get permission to visit the country's most prohibited areas. He begins his account by saying that he and his interpreter and two guards had to travel by night. "We did not get into the car until darkness had fallen. I had no idea where they were taking me, and even the driver's answer was evasive, so on the whole the occasion looked promising."

But after a few twists and turns on the "ghastly" roads, Mnacko said, he was no longer able to tell where he was or in which direction he was travelling. "When the driver turned off his headlights and drove in complete darkness I gave up altogether."

Mnacko could see nothing, and the first indication of his destination came to him when he smelled the sea.

At first he could not believe that they were going to the coast, as only the day before the North Vietnamese had told him that on no account could they get to the sea because it was dangerous and they had to think of his safety.

"The driver stopped and showed his paper to somebody, a conversation went on in Vietnamese, and after a moment in the torchlight I saw an army officer bending forward into the car and reaching for my hand. He said, through my interpreter:

"You are the first foreigner to get permission to visit this area." He lifted the barrier himself, and we were free to continue our journey.

The headlights were left switched off. Mnacko could see the sea and a large bay which "glittered in the dim light." A group of junks with furled sails was silhouetted against the horizon.

"It was a magnificent sight, and I felt like shouting with excitement," he says.

"We passed under a gangway of bamboo poles, and somewhere in the darkness and automatic crane came jerking to life. We were in one the secret, makeshift ports of the Vietnamese army."

Mnacko remembered that he had been told in Hanoi on his arrival that the North Vietnamese were ready for an emergency, "including the wrecking of Haiphong Harbor."

Now he saw half-naked men unloading heavy boxes from a number of boats.

Then the Czech was shown down into the cabin of one of the craft, where he was surrounded by Vietnamese officers. The commander, according to Mnacko, said: "So you want to know about our life here. It's hard and dangerous, like all life in Vietnam today. It gives the Americans a headache, though. We know you are intelligent, and there is no need to explain to you about this place. There are many of them upon our coastline. There will be no sign of us during the morning — for the tide is our ally."

The commander of this secret fleet continued to give information to Mnacko which he clearly did not expect. He listened and asked no questions, lest the young commander abruptly end the conversation.

"The Americans," said the commander, "know all about us, but we are too quick for them, and they can never really discover where we are. The only thing they can do is to continually molest us and try to sink our boats. But, — and her the commander raised his voice — "this fleet is indestructible. We have thousands of boats like this one. It is true that they cannot carry more than 20 tons each, but if sunk their loss does not mean so much to us. We work mostly at night, crawling around the coast without leaving the three mile limit, making good use of all the bays."

Mnacko points out that the commander told him that most of the towns and villages in the bombed zones of North Vietnam are supplied regularly by these fleets.

The conversation ended suddenly as the sun appeared. "The commander glanced at his watch, and bade me goodbye. We left the boat. For a while we watched from the land. The junks were setting their sails. The cranes and bamboo gangways had disappeared, and soon only the hazy outline of a ghostly fleet could be seen in the distance."

"The Canadian Crisis"

Trouble Unrecognized

From Le Devoir, Montreal

THE year 1967 will mark the centenary of the federal regime. It will not be, as many had hoped, the year of great constitutional revision. Nor will it be the year of rupture.

However, it appears that the country is moving inevitably towards the great confrontation desired for several years by a large section of public opinion in Quebec. Premier Johnson has placed amendment of the British North America Act at the top of his program of action.

Many intellectuals, political and social leaders of English Canada have rallied to the support of this objective. A prudent man such as Premier Robarts of Ontario indicated that he would agree to participate in work on a constitutional adjustment. In Quebec, the large labor organizations submitted to the provincial government a brief which, while supporting the federal principle, suggested ... important changes to the existing regime.

On Ottawa's side, technocrats who only yesterday were vowing to maintain the status quo have discreetly started studies aimed at preparing for eventual negotiations with the provinces. Prime Minister Pearson recently indicated that, providing the necessary time is devoted to it, it probably will be necessary to resign ourselves to a revision of Canadian constitutional machinery.

These divergent facts indicate the tone which celebrations marking the centennial of Confederation should take. There will be celebrations and games, as might be expected.

There will be Expo, an accomplishment to which the whole country will have contributed.

But the atmosphere will not be one of easy complaisance. Clear-thinking Canadians will not allow themselves to be seduced by state visits and the inauguration of new public buildings. They will recall that our people united for a century by ties often fragile feel the need to reshape our destiny in the light of the new realities of 1967. They will seek, in meditation and reflection, to lay the groundwork for future discussions that will permit them to define what the Canada of tomorrow should be.

Men of politics who will have been attentive to this attempt at reflection will tomorrow be the ones to whom public opinion will confide the redoubtable task of finding lasting solutions to the trouble which many Canadians still refuse to recognize but which the Laurendeau-Dunton commission rightly called "the Canadian crisis."

Confident of Survival Despite Hatreds, Tensions

King Remains Calm Amid Hysteria

Hussein

By DAVID LANCASHIRE
From Amman, Jordan

"Sometimes I feel like the central character in a detective story."

This was King Hussein, speaking of his 15 turbulent, melodramatic years on the throne of Jordan, a reign that began in gunfire and now once again is shadowed by menace.

In 1951, when he was only 15, Hussein saw his grandfather, King Abdullah, killed. The assassin turned the gun on him. Miraculously, a medal saved him, and the bullet ricocheted off harmlessly.

Trouble dogged him. From 1955 to 1958, he held his chaos and voilence stirred by kingdom together through his Arab rivals. He escaped at the controls of his own plane from a murderous attack by two Syrian MiG jets. He put down a military uprising by driving into the midst of the hooting. He avoided two other attempts on his life — a bomb and acid in his medicine chest.

Somehow, the king remains confident of survival, while a brooding tension hangs over the western part of Jordan facing the hated state of Israel.

The latest crisis exploded Nov. 13 when Israel, rankled over raids by guerrilla forces which Jordan has been unable to control, sent sent troops and tanks rolling across the armistice line and smashed the Jordanian village of Es Samu. Riots erupted in Jordan, not so much against Israel as against Hussein, demanding arms, action and vengeance. Jordan's Arab neighbors joined the cry.

On the present crisis, Hussein told me: "There is nothing we can do except to continue as we have done — continue trying to build the country in the face of attempts by Israel, and other Arab countries, too, to destroy everything we have built."

This calm assessment is typical of Hussein, now 31. His personality, dashing way of life and appeals for reason and moderation present, at least to the West, the most appealing image of any Arab leader. Those same characteristics, however, plus his family's long associations with the West, damn him in the eyes of other Arab leaders and many of his own subjects.

Hussein is a conservative in a society where conservatism is widely construed as weakness. He seeks progress with quiet words, in an area where wild declarations are often more esteemed. And he is a king, of stately ancestry and British education, in a region where military presidents and socialist juntas have seized the spotlight.

Hussein took the oath of monarchy May 2, 1953, when he was not yet 17 years old.

Jordan was a bitter enclave, its population tripled by 1,000,000 new Jordanians seething with hatred. The cause — and the cause of Jordan's troubles today — was the Arab-Israeli war of 1948.

When the Zionists proclaimed Israel a state, the Arab armies struck to recover the Holy Land. Jordan's little Arab Legion bore the brunt of the fighting. When a temporary truce was proclaimed, Jordanian forces held Jerusalem and more than 2,000 square miles of Palestine.

After the armistice of 1949, King Abdullah annexed as part of Jordan the half of Palestine his troops had won, and gave Jordanian citizenship to its 1,000,000 embittered people. Cries of outrage erupted from the other Arab countries that Abdullah had sided with the British to allow the creation of Israel.

Today, two thirds of Hussein's 2,000,000 subjects are Palestinians. Half were driven from their homes in Israel, and some 230,000 still live in bitter futility in United Nations camps. They are the most explosive element in the Middle East.

Unrest has swollen since the emergence of the Palestine Liberation Organization in Cairo. Hussein refuses to sanction Palestinian guerrilla raids into Israel and refuses to allow the PLO to operate in Jordan.

Hussein is as fervently Arab and anti-Israel as any of his rivals, but with a 350-mile frontier to defend against Israel, he acts more circumspectly.

"Jordan is a country that depends upon good neighbors for its existence," Hussein says. "On one side we have Israel, on the other side are our sister Arab states, comrades against the common foe of Israel, but also frequently hostile to us."

In the face of such pressures, Hussein somehow remains calm.

He opposes domination of the Arab world by President Gamal Abdel Nasser of the United Arab Republic, but feels the major threat to the Middle East is Communism. If the Arab states fall under its sway, he believes, Israel will get the full backing of the West.

The present Arab propaganda against Jordan seems to have become "more serious," summarized a western source. "Jordan has always been a political hot potato and the other Arab countries seem to be out to destroy the regime."

The king himself contered: "The future is not too bad." And if he were assassinated? "I think Jordan would continue to exist."

War on Vandalism Everyone's Concern

Police Need Your Help

Few will disagree with Mayor Hugh Stephen's declaration of war against youthful vandalism and violence but there is a little matter of just how a successful campaign is to be waged.

One thing is certain and that is that nothing will be achieved without the unqualified support and co-operation of the whole public.

There's nothing which drives people into a rage faster than unprovoked injury to people or senseless destruction of property but, on the other hand, there's nothing harder to pin down.

We have had enough of it in this town to justify the mayor's warning. Cemeteries have been desecrated and public property damaged and fouled. People, young and old, have been threatened and, in a few case, injured by brainless young thugs.

Police know that people are angry about it and it is one of the principal concerns of the department's youth detail which may, incidentally, be bucked up in the near future. However, it doesn't take much acumen to know that, unless these young idiots are caught in the act, charges can never be made to stick in a court of law.

By A. H. MURPHY

And this is where the public comes in.

If you see vandals in the act or anything which might lead you to believe that trouble is being planned — then for heaven's sake get on the phone.

Don't worry about becoming involved and don't worry about making a mistake — just get on the phone.

Police promise that they will do their best to see that informants are not involved and they point out that if a mistake is made our system of justice is quite strong enough to protect the innocent.

The Victoria Chamber of Commerce has offered a reward of $500 for the arrest and conviction of vandals and, while this may be a deterrent and a help in bringing vandals to justice, it's a pretty poor thing when people have to be paid to report law-breakers.

Particularly this type of law-breaker. Because, make no mistake, he is not a minor offender. He is a mean sneak.

No one is suggesting that it would be any help but there is a curfew bylaw on the city's books.

It requires "children" of 16 years and under to "be in their homes" after 9:30 p.m.

Home Woes Reflected in School Work

Study Spotlights Sore Spot

Education used to be a simple thing, according to the old - timers. You learned to read, write and cipher, and there was no nonsense about it.

Well, it was simple, because of the ignorance and indifference surrounding education. The more we learn about the subject the more complicated and frustrating it gets.

By way of illustration we have, a study made recently under sponsorship of the Canadian Welfare Council. It shows that children in families that are receiving public assistance perform poorly in school compared with children at the same economic level whose families are not on social welfare.

The study was made by Dr. Mukhtar Malik of the council's research staff, who did his investigations in four large Canadian cities, including Vancouver.

He studied 339 families receiving public assistance, with a "control group" of 181 families not on welfare whose children were friends of the youngsters who were.

A LOOK AT LEARNING

By BILL STAVDAL

The children under study were in the seventh grade and up.

The study showed that parents on welfare had lower hopes for their children, and the children themselves expected to do less in life.

About 47 per cent of the parents hoped that their sons would go beyond high school, but only 24 per cent expected that they would do so. The corresponding figures for girls are 37 per cent and 21 per cent.

In almost twice as many assisted families as control families, the oldest child left school below the age of 16.

"The sheer financial necessity of earning money to help support the family had forced these children out of school in a large proportion of cases," says the Canadian Welfare Council.

Absence of the father (either physically or figuratively) was a striking characteristic of the welfare families. In 96 per cent of cases, the father was either absent or unemployed.

All the above information is material which teachers have long suspected to be true, but which nobody can be sure of until scientific study is done.

The remedies sugested by Dr. Malik are logical but — inevitably — involved and costly.

He suggests that "schools must pay more attention to motivating boys who spend most of their time in homes where the male is absent or ineffectual . . ." In other words, a teacher with his already-large class ought to find time to be a father-figure to a lost boy.

Dr. Malik further suggests that special stipends should be given to welfare children approaching high school to give them decent clothing and an incentive to stay in school.

He urges strongly that social workers be attached to school systems. He wants supplementary cultural services for deprived children. Schools arrange special classes or tutoring for children whose aspirations are limited.

Some of these things are being done locally for deprived children, and the trend is increasing.

But they need money and an enlightened public willing to pay for them. The alternative is more drop-outs, more hopeless marriages and welfare families and another generation of problem children.

Formula for Enticing Tourists

Caddy Counter to Expo!

Here's how British Columbia could lure a bunch of adventurous tourists to the West Coast this summer from the Expo 67 world's fair in Montreal:

Revive one of B.C.'s famous sea serpents from its watery grave sometime in May and give it a full scale, tongue-in-cheek publicity promotion.

Westbound trains and airlines would be filled with snapshot artists once the word had been spread through the fairgrounds that a live serpent could be seen in British Columbia.

This is a sure-fire formula. It has been used successfully for years by a faithful few who swear there is indeed a Loch Ness monster near Inverness, Scotland.

In our promotion, I think Victoria's Cadborosaurus would be a better candidate or tourist bait than the Okanagan Lake's mythical Ogopogo, primarily because Caddy is a sea-going version which would have less chance of being unmasked.

Some service club, as a Confederation centenary project, would quietly set about the task of building a maneouvrable replica of Caddy and finding a secret hiding place in some unused boathouse on one of the Gulf Islands.

From this secret base, far from the eyes of any potential disbelievers, Caddy would embark on occasional visits to the shipping lanes used by the large B.C. Ferries fleet.

Early in the tourist season, a visitor from say, the state of Maine, would report to the Victoria newspapers he had seen a strange humpbacked critter following one of the B.C. Ferry ships towards the entrance to Active Pass.

This would be enthusiastically printed here — because, naturally, we are quite proud of our Caddy — and the story would be dutifully picked up by The Canadian Press wire service for news media across Canada.

A few days later, a spurt of Caddy sightings would start coming in, and Victorians travelling to and from the lower mainland would do their bit by standing at the rails, like touts at a racetrack, to advise the uninformed that there is a serpent out there somewhere.

Meanwhile, the four bilingual girls from British Columbia, hired to work as guides in the Western Canada pavilion at the Expo fairgrounds in Montreal would be expected to keep customers advised about the excitement on the West Coast.

By JACK FRY

The scheme may be ridiculous, but it's not impossible. A group of druggists and pharmaceutical salesmen nearly pulled off a stunt like this at Mill Bay, in May, 1963.

On that occasion, a retired social worker from Brandon, Man., was led to believe she had actually seen the famed Cadborosaurus.

The woman's story and her snapshot of Caddy were given national publicity, until it was learned that Caddy was nothing more than a bunch of automobile tires nailed to a wooden frame, which was manipulated by a diver in a wet suit.

Proof that people are fascinated by tales of mysterious sea monsters lies in the fact that the library in the Legislative Buildings has a file of index cards two inches thick, with listings of sea serpent stories dating back to Aug. 5, 1902.

Actually, at the first burst of publicity, the real Caddy would come charging out of his lair to grab some of his accustomed publicity — and the race would be on for fair.

Rangers Devise Numbers Game —For Elephants

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa (CNS) — They found out long ago why the chicken crossed the road.

The modern version of the old riddle is slightly more complicated: why did the elephant cross the river? The answer could save the lives of hundreds of elephants.

Game rangers in the 8,000-square-mile Kruger National Park are trying to learn why some elephants migrate over the Limpopo, how long they stay away and why.

There is a gross overpopulation of elephants in some parts and no elephants in others.

And because the highly social ones are eating the bush bare and refuse to disperse to more thinly populated areas, rangers are thinning them out with the rifle.

The answer may not be long in coming because a "simple" method of tracing the migrations of elephants has been developed: you get an old-fashioned crossbow, some drug-filled darts and a can of good paint.

The elephant is knocked out in the field. He becomes immobilized, but rangers find it is best to wait until he falls over before approaching him. Then they paint huge numbers on him. Marked elephants can be seen from a mile or more away. They are marked on all sides including the buttocks and tusks.

Rangers merely have to wait for tourists and African game guards to report sighting numbered elephants.

The most interesting result so far concerns a solitary bull — "elephant No. 12" — which startled Africans by appearing in a remote part of Rhodesia. It had crossed the murky Limpopo which divides Kruger National Park from Rhodesia and must have wandered north into Rhodesia for several days.

Biologists are now trying to discover why the elephant migrated. They have known for years that Kruger Park's elephants did migrate but never knew where they went.

They hope to discover some artificial stimuli that will persuade other elephants to migrate out of the heavily-populated areas into areas where there is room for them.

Municipalities Urged to Help

Thousands of Victorians in Dire Need Of 'Decent' Low Rental Housing

By JIM BRAHAN

One out of every five people in Greater Victoria is over the age of 65, and of these some 2,000 are in dire need of decent low rental accommodation, says the president of the Victoria Senior Citizens' Housing Society.

Each year the need for good quality low rental accommodation for the elderly becomes more pressing as their numbers increase in this area, said Mrs. May Campbell.

"Our senior citizens need decent places to live at rents they can afford to pay."

MOST ARE HERE

She explained this area has a higher percentage of elderly residents than any other part of the nation.

"They come here from all over Canada to get away from the cold winters. Many prairie people have planned all their lives to retire here on the coast."

The society has recognized this urgent housing requirement and is constructing its second apartment complex for the elderly in this area.

SPRING OPENING

The new structure, costing some $280,000 will be opened early this spring and will contain 38 suites plus a janitor's suite. Twenty-four will be single units and 14 will be for married couples.

The lodge under construction on a 1.36 acre site at Townley and Richmond is conveniently located close to a shopping centre, bus route, bank and other facilities.

SELF-CONTAINED

Each suite will have a living room, a kitchenette equipped with an electric range and refrigerator, a private bathroom, and cupboard space. Single suites will be a bed-sitting room type and those for married persons will have a single bedroom.

The rents have been tentatively set at $34 for single units, and $53 for the double.

Mrs. Campbell said the society realizes their two lodges cannot accommodate all the older residents who are in need of decent living quarters.

HELP AVAILABLE

"We hope the municipalities will take it up, because tremendous help is available from the federal government under urban renewal."

Saanich Reeve Hugh Curtis explained that last year's council requested a study be made at the level of the two senior governments to see what could be done in Saanich.

Council is looking beyond just the senior citizen's housing problems and wants a study made of how best to help all the municipality's residents in need of low rental housing.

SITUATION EASED

While the local governments are studying ways and means to alleviate the housing problem for the elderly the Victoria society and other organizations are trying to help ease the situation in the best way with their limited funds.

The first project built by the society was the 26 single occupancy suites — Banfield Lodge — on Styles Street in Victoria West.

COST $125,000

This structure cost approximately $125,000, and the money came from: public donations, a grant of one third of the construction cost from the provincial government, and a long term mortgage from the federal government's Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation.

Mrs. Campbell said that at the present time there are only two men living at Banfield Lodge, and the rest of the suites are occupied by women.

ALWAYS FULL

Since Banfield Lodge was first opened there has never been a vacant suite. The society also has a waiting list of prospective tenants far in excess of the number of suites in the lodge.

The new building will be a help, the president said, but there still will not be enough to do the job that is needed in Greater Victoria.

Victoria architect Clive D. Campbell in his design of the new structure has given particular thought to the physical frailties of the elderly.

TWO SECTIONS

The building will have a ground level entrance. To reduce height so there will be only one floor requiring the use of stairs, the main building is in two sections, with ground and upper floor in each. The sections are linked together by a one-storey structure which will contain a lounge with kitchenette, a hobby workshop, laundry room with automatic washers, storage rooms with private lockers.

NO BASEMENT

There will be no basement, and the heating will be electric, thermostatically controlled in each suite.

Victoria Senior Citizens Housing Society was incorporated in 1956 under the Societies Act of B.C. It is a non-profit organization whose purpose is to make available to elderly persons of slender means, good quality, modern living accommodation at low rentals.

Apartments, designed specifically for elderly who cannot pay high rents, take shape at Townley and Richmond. They will be occupied by spring — (Robin Clarke)

Separatist Stickers All Right

QUEBEC (CP) — Transport Minister Fernand Lizotte said Wednesday he has recommended that police constables in the province do not show excessive zeal in dealing with motorists who have separatist slogans on their 1967 licence plates.

Dr. Lizotte said in an interview he has no personal objection to drivers attaching such slogans to their plates provided the plates are not altered and none of the information on them is obscured.

At least one group named in Quebec, the separatist Rassemblement pour l'independence nationale, has asked its members to protest against the inscription 1867 — Confederation — 1967 which appears on the new rear plates by attaching a slogan reading Confederation—100 ans de injustice (Confederation—100 years of injustice).

The new licence plates and their slogan were chosen by Claire Kirkland-Casgrain, transport minister under the former Liberal government defeated in a provincial election June 5.

Gold Blocking Process Used

By FAITH ANGUS

The BBC South Atlantic relay station stamps released by Ascension last month gave Harrison and Sons an opportunity to use their gold blocking process. The background of the stamps was first printed by photogravure, then the royal portrait and station emblem were produced by the new method. In future, features such as heads, crowns, shields etc. can be produced in gold, silver, copper or bronze. The relay will be on the air 20 hours a day and will broadcast to both sides of the Atlantic, West, Central and South America. All programs will originate in Bush House, London headquarters of the B.C. External Services.

Fatness Hard to Cure

By BRYANT EVANS

Obesity is usually preventable, infrequently curable.

This seems to be the kernel of the message in a medical article about the views of Dr. John Mayer of Havard University who has edited a new book on Obesity and Health.

It is bad for anyone to be fat but it is worse if he has been fat since childhood, the argument goes. The fat child who becomes a fat adult has just about had it.

Dr. Mayer has taken a new look at obesity and decided that much that has been said and written about it is nonsense.

For instance there is that statement that overweight is just a matter of accounting. Perhaps if you are plump you have been told that all you have to do is to reduce the number of calories you eat to the amount you expend in work.

Dr. Mayer has found, so far, 27 kinds of obesity, caused by everything from heredity to faulty hormone production. Many of the causes are nondietary.

But environment is a common contributory cause to most obesity in our society, he and his colleagues think.

It is the lack of exercise that is making us a nation of fatties, but it is not just a simple case of eating more calories than we use.

Dr. Mayer finds that the regulatory mechanism that controls appetite and the utilization of food won't work well when too little energy is expended by an individual.

He explains why it is so hard to keep thin after weight has been lost. Adipose tissue, thought of as hollow cells that can take on nutrients—in fact suck them up. Dr. Mayer found that once they are inflated by weight gain, they fill no more easily thereafter.

As a result the once fat always tend to be fat.

Fatness also produces positive feedback in other ways, it turns out. It was found that when fat girls played games they exercised much less than thin girls. Psychologically they withdrew from competition.

What are the best cures for obesity?

The doctors agreed that most of the treatments now touted were limited in their value. High-fat or carbohydrate diets are hazardous and their results short-lived. Formula diets, including all-liquid diets, are too monotonous and unpalatable for people to stay with them.

Appetite killing drugs are limited in their effect.

In the end there are only two methods that work—limited food intake and exercise, and these need to be used together.

The book also has some things to say about weight charts: Throw them away. A better way to find out if you are too fat is to undress and stand in front of a mirror.

It won't lie.

Mozart

Symphony Programs Under Public's Fire

Bill Thomas

ON MUSIC

The response to my invitation to sound off on the ills of the Victoria Symphony has been both interesting and productive.

There were naturally the usual writers who felt there was nothing wrong with the orchestra that could not be cured by feeding its critics indigestion tablets but, on the other hand, there were those who had considered the problem at some length and took the time to put their suggestions on paper.

TICKET BUYERS

The general feeling is that the programming needs a drastic overhaul. No organization offering music can operate solely by consensus but the ticket buyers must have the final say and here is what they do say. (We promised no names would be used and we stick by that promise.)

G. M. writes "The programs seem dull, no excitement, no color, no challenge . . . after 50 years of Beethoven, Schubert and Mozart I want to hear Hindemith, Berg and Schoenberg.

SHORTER WORKS

"The one worthwhile concert this fall was Robin Wood playing Shostakovich's piano concerto. It was well worth the whole season's fee."

This problem with the programming is sustained in most of the letters though most suggest a more varied program with shorter works supplementing possibly one symphony at each concert.

Almost all writers want to hear more soloists even if they are not top names.

ROCK BOTTOM

W.C. writes it would be better to cut seat prices to rock bottom and fill the house both nights rather than play to slim audiences as is the pattern now.

This letter says the programs are "repetitious and boring." It suggests more soloists and possibly the introduction of concert performances of some of the more popular operas.

The advocates of the moderns have as many counterparts who feel there should be regular performances of the standard works each season. All of which makes the task of the symphony president just more difficult.

On the lighter side there are those who find the printed program a bore. One writer asks if "we can't avoid printing all those names of patrons and donors over and over again."

Needless to say there is the consistent group who feel the orchestra would be in clover if the critics stopped panning the concerts and rave over everything.

It's all our fault, say some, and the orchestra is every bit as good as any anywhere in the world.

One letter reads: "No one is encouraged to go to the concerts after reading your criticisms and even season ticket holders might wonder if their tickets are worth the money after reading how badly the orchestra plays — according to you."

There is no doubt changes are coming and many of them will go a long way to meeting the demands of most of the symphony's patrons.

MEREDITH TRIES

President John Meredith not only wants his orchestra to succeed but also is doing his best to see it does.

It will probably take longer than even he thinks and already it's safe to suggest he will have to reconsider his earlier decision to serve for just one year.

Most of the orchestra's troubles can and will be solved within the limits of financial possibility if John Meredith has his way.

The space is still open if there are any other suggestions readers may wish to make.

Those who were fortunate enough to see the Bastion musical Oliver in its second week remarked on the great performances by Marge Bridgeman as Nancy. In the second leg she conquered her cold and gave the role all the "heart" it needed. An excellent performance. I know—I saw it three times.

The latest effort to brighten gloomy Sunday comes from Len Michaux and Wayne Turner, who open a new jazz club at 9 p.m. today.

Premises are at the Club Tango on Yates. Music will be continuous from opening with the 20th Century Jazz Quintet and a new group, the Foster Vasey trio. The operation is called the Cat's Cradle.

50,000,000 Frenchmen

PARIS (Reuters) — There's finally going to be some truth to the old song and saying 50,000,000 Frenchmen can't be wrong.

The national statistics institute says the French population, growing at 800,000 a year, will pass the 50,000,000 mark this summer.

The lady from Shelbourne Street coaxed her husband to bring her for dinner to IMPERIAL's pool-side dining room.

She wanted a gay night out, she said—something different and delectable and a chance to show off her New Year's gown again.

So he did the noble thing. Imperial Beef Kabab for two, he told our Maitre d' Leslie. All eyes turned their way as a waiter carried in the flaming sword with choice morsels of beef tenderloin impaled on it and broiled to perfection.

And there was golden rice and a special sauce from the Middle East.

"It was delicious," the lady from Shelbourne said later, "but I don't think too many people really saw my new dress. I have a distinct impression I was upstaged by a tenderloin steak."

Her husband just grinned.

For Victorians in England

A Lonely Christmas

There are those winters when Christmas is about the loneliest time of the year.

It was that kind of a Christmas for the quartet of Victoria boys calling themselves the Canadians, as they tasted the chill of England's entertainment world.

First there were seven, then there were four.

BACK IN VICTORIA

The three horn players who had given the group its distinctive sound returned to Victoria That left Bob Faulds, Barry Casson, Dave Foster and Mike Stymast.

The foursome found itself at New Year's Eve sharing a bill with an American group, the Spellbinders.

They were playing near Sheffield, in front of a crowd of 6,200, trying to get used to being four instead of seven.

BEFORE FACING

"It scared hell out of us, not having the usual number, but we went over great," Barry says. "I killed a bottle of champagne myself before facing that crowd. That was our New Year's."

There were other things happening to the boys that were new, exciting and a bit silly.

Their van ran out of gas in Piccadilly Circus, an hour after the muffler had fallen off.

There were some red Canadian faces as "all those buses, taxis and people waited for us to put in the spare gallon of gas we carried."

TRY AGAIN

The Canadians are looking for a new horn player or two. A record featuring the singing of Bobby Faulds will be out Jan. 20 and the group hopes it will make the British top 10.

"If not," said Barry, "we will just have to try again with a different style."

Denise Wood, 11, will play Helen Keller in The Miracle Worker by William Gibson. The Victoria Theatre Guild production will star Sheila Litt as Annie Sullivan, the sightless girl's teacher. The play opens Feb. 6 at Langham Court.

Eugene Gallant has a partial cast of actors for You Can't Take It With You, which will play the McPherson next month.

Robert Price has the lead: some others are Bill and Sylvia Hosie, Don McManus and Margaret Hall.

MORE DIALECTS

Gina Bigelow, who had to study Manchester dialect for her lead role in A Taste of Honey, is working on both Scottish and French for two parts she plays in Bastion's spring tour.

John Heath, local actor, writer and designer, has completed a children's musical which will be presented at the McPherson during Easter week.

Stewart Paul will be on leave of absence from the Bastion Theatre while he is with Expo as a production manager. He intends to return as business manager here next October.

Jim Moody of the Pink Panther has left his recent location and will open a new club on Douglas Street next weekend.

The University of Victoria finally got around to admitting it will enter Louis Capson's original play The Potter's Field in the Dominion Drama Festival.

The University says The Potter's Field is "a dark comedy . . . deals provocatively with the problem of commitment . . . has a multi-level, neo-realist setting" (eat your heart out, Edward Albee).

Little Mary Sunshine will be Bastion's musical offering in the McPherson this summer. Musical director is Merlisse Hill.

Rat Patrol Angers Australians

LONDON (UPI) — Australian ex-servicemen living in London have joined other angry Second World War veterans protesting the U.S. television series The Rat Patrol.

The first instalment of the series—dealing with the exploits of three American and one British soldier during the North African campaign—was shown Wednesday.

The Australian veterans complained the program showed an American soldier wearing a traditional Australian slouch hat, complete with official insignia, which looked "as though it had been purchased brand new from a gift shop."

Other criticisms of the series came from British Legion and war historians, mainly on grounds that the Americans did not play a significant part in the desert campaign.

Spain Jails Offensive Writer

MADRID (AP)—The Spanish National Court of Public Order has sentenced a young writer to six months in jail and fined him $166.

Isaac Montero, 24, wrote a novel, Around an April Day, which he tried to publish without deleting portions considered offensive to the Gen. Franco regime.

The court refused as evidence a questionnaire signed by 99 prominent Spanish writers and intellectuals, who stressed the necessity of an absolute freedom of expression in Spain and a condemnation of the censorship.

The book was seized last August by orders of the court and never was published.

Curtain Up Across The Nation

Messer

Olivier

OTTAWA (CP) — When Les Feux-Follets began its first national tour Thursday in Fort William, the curtain also rose on a centennial program called Festival Canada.

Through about $1,500,000 in grants, the program is sending more than a dozen leading companies on tour in the next 12 months.

Les Feux-Follets, a Montreal folk troupe, will sing and dance in 65 cities in all provinces. National tours also are being made by:

● TV favorite Don Messer and his Islanders, whose summer excursion may extend into the northern territories.

● Vancouver's Holiday Theatre, which is even being booked for morning performances before young audiences next fall.

● The Ballet Roland Petit of France, which will visit all provinces in October and November.

● B.C.'s rousing Barkerville gold rush days variety show, which can be done with equal success anywhere from an opera house to a saloon.

The Festival Canada agency pays travel costs. An arrangement with the provinces also provides for box office subsidies to keep ticket prices down.

IN B.C. NEXT FALL

The New York Philharmonic will perform in Nova Scotia, Quebec, Ontario, Manitoba, Alberta and B.C. next fall.

With the Ballet Roland Petit of France and the National Theatre of Great Britain, it is among the three foreign shows going on tour.

The National Theatre, with Sir Laurence Olivier, will perform in Manitoba, Alberta and Saskatchewan in October, and take part in the world festival at Expo 67 during the summer.

TWELFTH NIGHT

The Stratford Shakespearean Festival takes new productions of two plays — Gogol's The Government Inspector and Shakespeare's Twelfth Night — to eight provinces Feb. 13 to May 8.

The National Ballet tours Quebec and the Maritimes in the winter and Ontario and the Prairies in the summer.

While le Theatre du Rideau Vert hits eastern theatres in the fall, le Theatre du Nouveau-Monde will play the West. Both are Montreal companies.

NBC Style Right For Left

BONN (LAT) — The year-old appointment of John Chancellor of NBC as the first prominent broadcaster to head The Voice of America seems to be working.

The Voice, which beams especially at the Red bloc of eastern Europe, says its new policy of more popular music and more bright talk has been answered by a big change in Soviet bloc broadcasting.

Newscasts and music have been jazzed up while economic and political propaganda has been reduced. In addition, Red radio now is aimed more at east than west, in a reflection of the Moscow-Peking clash.

Film Critics Pick Antonioni

NEW YORY — The National Society of U.S. Film Critics has chosen Blowup, Michelangelo Antonioni's first English movie, as the best of 1966. It was denied U.S. and Catholic seals of approval due to its sexual sequences in modern London.

A Man for All Seasons was second, followed by Who's Afraid of Virginia Woolf? Antonioni was best director, Michael Caine of Alfie best actor and French octogenarian Sylvie of The Shameless Old Lady best actress.

Bolshoi Big At Expo

MOSCOW (Reuters) — The Bolshoi company will invade Expo 67 on a massive scale: five operas from Aug. 5 to 31 with nearly 400 singers and stagehands.

Tass news agency, announcing the largest Bolshoi appearance outside Europe, said the operas will be Moussorgsky's Boris Godunov, Borodin's Prince Igor, Queen of Spades by Tschaikovsky, The Tale of the Invisible City of Kitezh by Rimsky - Korsakov, and Prokofiev's War and Peace.

Cold Blood Stars Unknowns

HOLLYWOOD (LAT)—Richard Brooks, the producer-director of Elmer Gantry and Spartacus, has chosen the stars of the most eagerly awaited film of 1967: Truman Capote's In Cold Blood.

Playing the two killers will be Robert Blake, 32, a Broadway-trained actor whose few TV parts are led by membership in the Richard Boone repertory company, and Scott Wilson, 28, a complete unknown who has only one TV bit part to his name.

BBC Cutback

LONDON (UPI) — The British Broadcasting Corporation will cut down on its foreign broadcasting services because of lack of funds. Daily broadcasts in Arabic beamed to the Middle East will be cut from 12 hours and a daily 30-minute Albanian service will be scrapped.

Vast Improvements

Centennial Crafts Commercial Hit

OTTAWA (CP) — The National Gallery has put together a Canadian crafts exhibit that has turned out to be an artistic and commercial smash.

The show, Canadian Fine Crafts 1966-67, will by put on the road during Centennial Year but there will be little left for interested people to buy. Practically every item in the collection was snapped up before the exhibition's three-week stint in Ottawa was half over.

"I'm sure there will be nothing left to send back" to the artisans, says exhibit organizer Norah McCullough of Regina, the gallery's western liaison officer.

But selling the works wasn't the main idea behind the exhibition. Miss McCullough wanted to point up the vast improvements that have been made in Canadian crafts since the Second World War.

She credits post-war immigration with part of the upsurge, plus rapid browth in the number of courses offered by private groups, schools and universities.

The exhibition will be split for the 1967 tour, half going to the East and half to the West. But the division has been made with the idea that each travelling show will be fully representative of all the works displayed at the gallery.

Miss McCullough hopes it will stimulate hundreds of new craftsmen and challenge those who have dabbled in the field.

Multi-Careered Templeton

Has CTV Found Savior?

TORONTO (Special) — There's just a chance that one man will make W5, the answer of Canada's private TV network to Seven Days, as much discussed as that rival and the CBC's present Sunday, and without their questionable taste.

He is Charles Templeton, the multi-careered man hired as director — a better word might be saviour — of CTV's news and public affairs programs.

GOT RELIGION

Templeton, 51, started that career 29 years ago as a sports cartoonist with the old Toronto Globe but, in a few years, got religion and became a Presbyterian minister and hymn writer.

After years of doubts about interfering with the souls of sinners, he left the church in 1957, sold three plays to CBC television and became a frequently-seen TV panelist and interviewer.

ILL-FATED BID

In 1959, he joined the Toronto Star. Within a year, he was managing the paper, a position he held until resigning in 1964 to make an ill-fated attempt at the Ontario Liberal party leadership.

Templeton has been an inventor for years and, after his political failure, formed a company with a brother to market some of the inventions — a company which still is prospering.

Just before the $35,000-a-year CTV offer was made public, he turned down a draft for the same Ontario Liberal leadership.

Of his new post, he says:

"The first responsibility of a public affairs show on prime-time television is to be interesting. If you're not, it doesn't matter whether you're responsible because nobody's going to watch.

"Beyond that, the fundamental responsibility is to be responsible. The impact of television is enormouns and the impact of electronic journalism is something not to be handled lightly.

"You dare not disregard it."

Of W5, Templeton says he has already outlined 30 projects he wants started — to keep the rating high. W5 has 213,000 viewers in 100,000 homes while Sunday has 200,000 in 102,000 homes.

Of Sunday, he says:

"Sunday either doesn't regard the news seriously enough or doesn't know how to treat the news, examine it. Sunday is interesting but that's not enough, because you can be interesting doing all kinds of outrageous and superficial things."

Oversize Ladle to Spoon Metal

This isn't an oversize hard hat or bird bath. It's a seven-ton ladle manufactured by Victoria Machinery Depot being loaded on railway car near Johnston Street bridge for first leg of its journey to Consolidated Mining and Smelting operation at Trail.

Higher Price Helps

OTTAWA (CP)—Many of the goods that cost Canadians more in 1966 were also being sold by exporters at impressive prices in world markets.

In many instances the boost at home could be blamed on the change in the world price.

But federal economists say that in terms of what was economically good for Canada, it was better for the consumer to pay a little more if it would guarantee those extra trade dollars returning to the country.

PUSHES, PULLS

This kind of price change usually had little or nothing to do with domestic inflationary pressures — the pushes and pulls blamed for the rising cost of living.

But it is one of the factors allowed to influence the calculation of price changes in the gross national product, the value of all goods and services turned out in Canada.

During the third quarter, the GNP's over-all price index went up one per cent. Free of the effect of export price changes, the GNP index would have gone up only eight-tenths of one per cent.

One government economist says this is a distortion that "makes the price performance in Canada look worse than it is."

Wheat is a good example of a commodity that earned millions for Canada during 1966 in better prices alone. Most buyers were paying 10 per cent more for Canadian wheat in September than they had paid on the average in 1965. The price of bread to Canadians also went up but from an economic point of view it was worth it.

International conditions dictated several other markups during 1966 of great benefit to Canada, trade statistics show.

COPPER SCARCE

Disruptions in Zambia, The Congo and Chile, main suppliers of copper besides Canada, made that commodity scarce. The price during the third quarter of 1966 was 32 per cent higher than at the same time a year earlier. In this case Canadian producers were not only able to enjoy higher sales and revenue, but they were able to keep prices steady to their customers at home.

Canadian lumber was more expensive around the world in the second quarter and newsprint in the third quarter; in these instances pressure existed in Canada but conditions in world markets left room for the increases.

From a statistical point of view, export prices were 3.4 per cent higher in the third quarter of 1966 than at the end of 1965. The price component of the GNP for the same period was 4.4 per cent.

A price index of personal expenditures, representing costs facing Canadians on retail purchases from day to day, was up 3.3 per cent.

For this longer period, export price changes actually proved to be a stabilizing factor in the GNP price component of about half of one per cent if you accept the thesis that export prices really work an important influence on domestic levels.

This may be supported in analyses of profits by industry for the year, which show that trade-oriented companies have found it toughest to raise prices.

Domestic industries, producing for the Canadian market under varying degrees of tariff protection, were not as badly hit by a profit squeeze during the year, indicating that competition is less rigorous at home than abroad.

Economists Eye Future

By KEN SMITH
Canadian Press

Economic indicators — those long lists of figures that can show which way a country's business is going—are getting a thorough scrutiny these days.

With Finance Minister Sharp describing the Canadian economy as being in delicate balance, people are crystal-balling the future with an enthusiasm not seen in Canada for years.

Although economists may not always — or even often — agree on how to interpret the indicators, there is general agreement on some of the ones that are most important.

Here are some to watch if you want to try to be the first on your street to predict whether the economy will resume its long upward climb or slip into recession.

Corporate profits are a key indicator, since they determine the rate and timing of capital investment and help set a mood of optimism or pessimism in executive suites about business expectations.

If profits are rising, expansion should follow as more funds are put into new plants and equipment. They open the door to higher wages, putting more money into consumers' hands.

In a period of decline, however, business leaders tend to postpone expansionist ventures. If enough decide at the same time to put off additional investment, trouble could be in the books.

Capital investment makes up an important segment of the gross national product and so has far-reaching effects on the economy generally. Some decline became apparent in late 1966.

Now the question is whether the easing in the rate of new investment was enough just to relax some of the pressures on supply, or whether the slowdown will continue.

The government's investment forecast to be issued shortly will be a tipoff.

Unemployment traditionally rises as a recession gets under way. Many experts have forecast unemployment will rise by about one per cent in 1967 to around 4¾ per cent, but most tend to see this resulting in an easing of the tight labor situation rather than the onset of trouble.

If it rises sharply, however, difficulties would be around the corner.

269,200 Models Steered Back

DETROIT (AP) — General Motors announced Friday it is recalling 269,200 of its 1967 model cars to replace steering shafts that may be defective.

These are new, impact-absorbing steering shafts that collapse when extreme pressure pushes in on them.

The defect is in the way the shaft was installed, and not the design.

Copper Firms Follow

NEW YORK (AP)—The two largest U.S. copper producers Friday followed a price increase announced Thursday by Phelps Dodge Corp., the third largest producer.

The Anaconda Co., the No. 1 producer, announced a two-cent increase, while Kennecott Copper Corp. disclosed a pricing formula that gave about the same advance.

Phelps Dodge raised its price to 38 cents a pound from 36 cents this week.

PRICES GIVEN

Major metals prices:

Copper—36-38 cents a pound delivered: foreign 55.0 cents, nominal, New York.

Lead—14 cents a pound, New York, 13.80 cents, St. Louis.

Zinc—14½ cents a pound, East St. Louis, 15 cents, New York.

Aluminum—24½ cents a pound, unalloyed ingots, delivered.

Nickel—85¼ cents a pound, electrolytic cathodes, Port Colborne, Ont.

Silver—$1.293 an ounce, New York; 111⅞ pence, London.

Better Deal Sought For Sugar

KINGSTON, Jamaica (AP) — Canadian bauxite companies, banks and insurance companies in Jamaica are to be invited by the Sugar Manufacturers Association to join the sugar industry in trying to persuade the Canadian government to provide more generous terms in its purchases of West Indian sugar.

Sir Robert Kirkwood, chairman of the sugar manufacturers and chairman of the International Sugar Council, announced the appeal Friday while giving evidence to a commission investigating the affairs of the local sugar industry.

Before the announcement the island supervisor of the National Workers Union, Senator Michael Manley, had suggested a "total approach" to the Canadian government on its sugar purchases.

He proposed the union request Canadian and international trade unions in Canada to try to get the Canadian government to buy West Indian sugar on more favorable terms.

Libby Dam Bids Invited

WASHINGTON (CP) — The U.S. Corps of Army Engineers sent invitations Friday to bid on the Libby Dam, main American construction project under the 1964 Columbia River agreement with Canada.

Officials said the current estimated cost of the project on the Kootenai River in Montana —the name in Canada is Kootenay—is $352,000,000. Bids will be opened Feb. 16.

Officials say that inflation has raised construction estimates on paper when the agreement was finally settled with Canada and British Columbia.

The Canadian portion of construction, three dams on the Columbia or its headwaters, was estimated at that time as costing $447,000,000 in Canadian funds.

The largest Libby contract to date has been for $44,000,000 to relocate railways. This continues.

The purpose of Libby, a controversial project among some quarters here and Canadian critics of the Columbia agreement, is to provide flood control and some power output.

More than 13,000 acres of the Kootenay Valley in B.C. will be flooded and critics wanted the dam in Canada to ensure Canadian control of the river before it crossed the border into the U.S.

Five in Family Survive Crash

LEADVILLE, Colo. (UPI) — An Illinois family of four and a Denver pilot who crashed on 14,037-foot Mt. Sherman west of Fairplay, Colo., were rescued by helicopter just minutes before the peak was hit by a vicious snowstorm.

First reports from St. Vincent's Hospital at Leadville indicated all five survivors of the crash were in good condition. One reportedly suffered a broken arm and fractured ribs. Another was said to have sustained minor injuries.

DESIGNED MONTHLY INCOME IN RETIREMENT

is not always easily arranged, as dividends or interest on investments often fail to tie in well with the monthly style of budget to which the retired man accustomed himself during his working years.

Further, of our retired clients are expressing their real desire to spend some of the capital of their retirement fund along with their earnings rather than have it all left in their estate.

To meet this need, Victoria Mortgage Corporation will mail a monthly cheque applying on any investment of $10,000 or over, for any AMOUNT you SPECIFY, to ARRIVE PROMPTLY ON THE FIRST OF EACH MONTH. This can be for interest only at 7½%, or for an amount including part principal, as well as interest.

Perhaps you will find the following table interesting:

$10,000 at 7½% produces $62.50 earnings per month. $10,000 at monthly payments of $70 including 7½% interest wears loan nearly 20 years to speed: $73 month—15 years; $80 month—20 years; $90 month—16 years; $100 month—13 years; $110 month—10 years; $120 month—8 years; $130 month—7 years; $200 month—4 years.

Terms of all 7½% Victoria Mortgage Debentures provide that the unused portion of your investment is repaid in five years—or earlier in the event of prior death, in which case your estate can cash the debenture.

To have the prospectus mailed, phone Douglas Hawkes Ltd., EV 6-7138, 617 Fort.

Language Laboratory May Be Trend-Setter

By NANCY BROWN

A home-made language laboratory at Belmont high school promises to be a trend-setting aid to education.

Designed and built by Naval Petty Officer A. R. MacKenzie, the 12-booth laboratory has brought up-Island school principals and superintendents to study the equipment and its uses.

TWO YEARS

It has been in use at the school for two years.

It consists of 12 student booths, each equipped with a microphone, a pair of earphones, and a control panel.

There is a control console which serves the dual purpose of relaying speech and music to the booths, and monitoring student transmissions.

TAPE DECK

A tape deck can be moved about the classroom when it is not connected to the console, and it contains space for earphones, tapes and records.

Two speakers are mounted on the classroom wall and can be connected to the amplifier in the console, or separately to one or two tape recorders.

It took PO MacKenzie an entire summer to build all the components.

CASUAL CHAT

The project was the result of a casual backfence chat between him and Belmont principal A. R. Stephenson.

When Mr. Stephenson mentioned that the school wanted a laboratory, PO MacKenzie, who had studied electronics, started to design equipment.

He based his units on the descriptions given to him by French language teacher David Massy.

He built all the booths and cabinets, as well as the electronic equipment.

"We are very lucky to have this in our area," Mr. Massy said Friday.

"It is just as necessary to a language teacher as microscope and chemicals are to a science teacher, but in Victoria the teachers don't have this."

HELP NEEDED

Mr. Massy stressed that the laboratory does not replace the teacher, and that it was only as good as the tapes, and the uses a teacher puts it to.

Four different programs may be played at one time, the student selecting the one he wants by plugging a jack into his control panel.

The teacher can speak to any number of students at a time on one channel, and he can monitor any program.

He can also use tapes, radio or record player over the different channels.

Records available include some made by French students in France.

"Our students can listen to the record, and can speak into his own microphone and hear his own voice.

"I can see a difference in the students, who are beginning to judge their answers to questions by how they sound, not how they look when they are written.

"They will have a great advantage if the language curriculum changes from its present French-English basis, to an aural basis," said Mr. Massy.

Jon O'Neill and Ken Walker are two student supervisors interested in electronics, who help Mr. Massy in the lab.

"They instruct students in use of the equimpent, and help them if necessary," explained Mr. Massy. "This leaves me free to deal with the actual curriculum."

The booths are designed to play programs at three speeds, and could be used for shorthand classes.

Big Water Study Stalled

Alberta

Manitoba's failure to sign a three-province agreement has stalled a proposed $5,000,000 study of prairie water supplies, Alberta Agriculture Minister Harry Strom declares.

There has been no indication why Manitoba has not agreed to the detailed study in Alberta, Saskatchewan and Manitoba, Mr. Strom said. Nor has the province officially refused.

The three-year study would provide an inventory of water in the Saskatchewan-Nelson River basin, extending from Manitoba's Whiteshell area to the Rocky Mountains. It would also consider the value of diverting water from other rivers into the system, as well as diversions within the basin.

Saskatchewan has signed the cost-sharing agreement and Alberta will sign when it is returned from Manitoba, Mr. Strom said. The federal government would pay half the cost and the balance would be shared equally by the provinces —some $833,000 each.

But, Mr. Strom said, the study cannot proceed without Manitoba.

The study was first discussed in 1963 and was to have started this year.

A roof collapse at Vegreville, which killed one man and injured eight others Oct. 21, was caused by a "lack of qualified engineering" on its temporary support, a coroner's jury ruled.

The jury found that Alphonse Gartner, 41, of Edmonton, died of head and chest injuries and multiple fractures after a newly-poured concrete dome on the Vegreville water reservoir collapsed.

The jury was told there was no professional engineer involved directly with the building of the wooden support of "falsework" for the dome or with the pouring of concrete for the dome.

Saskatchewan

Dr. John Orr, 77, plagued most of his life with tuberculosis and credited with opening TB clinics at Moose Jaw and Swift Current, died in Moose Jaw Thursday.

Dr. Orr started the clinics in 1929, and later was general superintendent and medical director for the Saskatchewan Anti-tuberculosis League until he retired in 1958.

More than 459,000 acres of provincialy-owned land have been sold since the government began its policy of selling to smaller farmers in 1965, Agriculture Minister McFarlane says.

The department in 1966 sold 235,601 acres of cultivated and grazing land. At the start of 1966, some 223,449 acres of land had been sold to 1,060 farmers, he said.

The land sales are made under a policy aimed at helping farmers build up their equity in the land they farm. Land is sold only to farmers who have held it under lease for a specific period of time and to farmers with small acreages.

Hearings of the prairie provinces cost-study commission will begin in Regina Jan. 24.

Meetings will continue to Feb. 14, when the commission returns to Saskatoon, Judge Mary Battan of Saskatoon, commission chairman, said.

She said a preliminary report could be available within two or three months after the meetings wind up.

Dates and venue of hearings:
Regina — Jan. 24-27.
Winnipeg — Feb. 1-2.
Flin Flon, Man. — Feb. 3.
Edmonton — Feb. 7-8.
Calgary — Feb. 9-10.
Saskatoon — Feb. 14.

Manitoba

Manitoba Liberal leader Gil Molgat says he will adopt a "wait and see" attitude on the reappointment of former finance minister Walter Gordon to the federal cabinet.

The Manitoba Liberal said he does not think the move by Prime Minister Pearson means a return by the federal government to restrictive trade and investment policies.

If it did, Liberals in the West would have to call further conferences similar to the one called last fall in Saskatoon.

Mr. Molgat said as long as Mr. Gordon was given a cabinet portfolio "removed from finance and trade," he could be a "useful" man to the government and the Liberal party.

A record amount of grain was moved by the CNR's prairie region in 1966.

The company reported today a total of 138,500 cars carrying 277,000,000 bushels of grain were moved to Fort William, Port Arthur, Churchill, Vancouver and Prince Rupert. The number of cars is 22,531 more than the 1965 total.

More than half the total was moved since Aug. 1 and officials said they expect shipments from Manitoba and Saskatchewan to continue at a high level through the winter.

The CNR has applied to the Board of Transport Commissioners for permission to abandon 491 miles of branch line in Manitoba and Saskatchewan.

The application involves 15 separate lines ranging in length from 13 to 80 miles — 302 miles in Manitoba and 189 miles in Saskatchewan — and that no major communities are affected by the application.

In all cases, the CN cited a low level of traffic as the reason for seeking abandonment and listed total operating loss for these lines in 1965 at slightly more than $1,000,000.

Airline Awaits Change

Pacific Western Airlines, which wants to operate a service between Victoria and Vancouver, is still awaiting changes in federal legislation previously outlined by Transport Minister Pickersgill.

"We are awaiting the definition of the regional air policy by the government, and whether it wil be expanded," PWA president Bruce C. Samis said from Vancouver this week.

JUST WAITING

"It will be two, probably three, months before we get anything concrete on establishing a service between Vancouver and Victoria, using DC 6-Bs."

If the route were a success for PWA, turbo-prop Viscounts would be later introduced, he said.

If the new policy changes are introduced, it is understood that they will allow subsidies to local airlines to compete with national airlines on sections of main routes.

Convention Centre Advocated

If a convention centre is built that will accommodate 5,000 it will naturally attract large conventions to Victoria, in the opinion of Peter Hartnell, manager of Queen Victoria Inn.

Such a centre with an auditorium to seat 5,000 has been suggested by a firm of experts, but Leslie Parkinson, manager of the Empress Hotel, has said it would be too ambitious for the community.

"I agree that we have only had small conventions here in the past, but that is simply because convention organizers know we don't have the facilities for larger conventions," Mr. Hartnell said Friday.

"The attractions of Victoria are known throughout North America, and large conventions would inevitably be attracted here if we had the facilities," Mr. Hartnell added.

Ailments Rise

WINNIPEG — (CP) Cases of scarlet fever and streptococcal sore throat are being reported at a higher-than-normal level in Manitoba, says Dr. Emmanuel Snell, director of preventive medical services.

Immediate, Long-Range Needs

Hospital Officials Meet Architects

Officials of St. Joseph's Hospital had preliminary talks Friday with architects about the institution's immediate and long-range needs.

The meeting was between Sister Mary Lucita, administrator, Dr. E. G. Q. Van Tilburg, medical director, and Michael Kelpin, construction supervisor, and a representative of Gardiner, Thornton and Associates, the architects.

Pat Blewett, assistant administrator, said discussions centred on provision of such immediate needs as a radio-isotope centre and a cardiovascular care unit.

The architects, engaged to develop St. Joseph's master plan, also were presented with a proposal to increase the hospital's bed capacity by about 100 over the current 448.

The addition of the beds, said Mr. Blewett, would mean St. Joseph's would also have to make long-range plans for expanded service centres.

Unity Prayer Scheduled At St. Christopher's

Greater Victoria Christians have been invited to pray for unity at a meeting in St. Christopher's Anglican Church, Tillicum and Carey Roads, at 7:30 p.m. Jan. 16. The meeting, sponsored by 12 churches in Saanich and View Royal, will mark the annual Week of Prayer for Christian Unity which begins Jan. 18.

Canon Robert Willis, rector of St. Christopher's, has issued an invitation to everyone in the area to attend.

Rev. H. R. Whitmore of Garden City United Church and Rev. Brian Cowan of St. Martin's-in-the-Fields Anglican Church will read scripture lessons during the service and will lead the congregation in prayers for unity.

Rev. John Vickers of St. Columba's and All Saints' Anglican Churches will speak on the role of prayer in fostering union among all believers.

CHAIRMAN

Following the service, Dr. Samuel Parsons of Centennial United, president of Victoria Council of Churches, will be chairman of a meeting, during which efforts will be made to form discussion groups from members of each denomination represented.

"The purpose of the groups is to study and pray for the reunion of all Christians," Dr. Parsons said Friday.

ONCE A MONTH

"To remove confusion and misunderstandings and to work for understanding each other's church is the aim. The groups should have from 12 to 15 members. They will meet in each other's homes once a month for Bible reading, prayer and discussion."

Dr. Parsons said the literature for the "living dialogues" is published jointly by the National Council of Churches of Christ in the U.S. and the Paulist Press.

Others serving on the committee for the prayer for unity at St. Christopher's are Rev. W. E. Greenhalgh of St. Michael's and All Angels' Anglican Church, Dr. E. A. Wright of Trinity Presbyterian, Rev. Richard Caldwell of St. Joseph's Roman Catholic Church and Msgr. M. T. O'Connell, chancellor of the diocese of Victoria.

Puck Vikings Down Nanaimo

NANAIMO — University of Victoria Vikings scored a 6-4 win over Nanaimo O'Keefes in an exhibition hockey game played here Saturday night.

Bill Rudyk scored two goals for the winners with Jim Shkwarok, Brian Whitten, Glyn Harper and Terry Foreman each scoring once.

Wanderers Sink Uvic

Vancouver Georgians didn't show for their exhibition rugby game Saturday against Oak Bay Wanderers who instead met University of Victoria.

The Wanderers won 13-5 on tries by Ken Wilkie and Paul Carnes. Don Burgess converted both and kicked a penalty.

Al Foster scored the students' try, converted by John Evans.

Two Counts

Boy's Body Found

SECHELT, B.C. (CP) — A Port Mellon, B.C., man and a 17-year-old juvenile were charged Saturday following the discovery of the skeleton of the man's son.

Joseph Latham appeared in magistrate's court at this community about 30 miles northwest of Vancouver charged with failing to bury a dead human body without lawful excuse.

The youth was charged in juvenile court with committing deliquency by murder.

OWN RECOGNIZANCE

Both were released on their own recognizance at the request of Crown counsel.

The charges followed the discovery last Tuesday of a skeleton near Port Mellon, 24 miles northwest of Vancouver.

Police identified it as that of Ricky Latham, presumed to have drowned while swimming in the area in June, 1965.

RCMP said an examination of the skeleton revealed what appeared to be a bullet hole in the back of the skull.

UNDER STONES

The skeleton was found under a pile of stones in heavy bush near the Howe Sound shore.

Ricky was 16 at the time of his disappearance. At the time he was reported missing, police tracking dogs followed his scent from a shack to the water's edge where they lost it.

Sechelt Coroner Dr. R. A. Swan said the skeleton was found 80 feet above the high water mark — too far up to have been deposited there by the ocean — and about 200 yards from where Ricky's clothing was found 18 months ago.

Cash for Youth in Soviet Jail

Home Town Has Hopes

MOSCOW (UPI) — A U.S. youth, backed by $22,222 raised by the people of his hometown, will ask a Leningrad court early this week to free him on bail pending appeal of his three-year Soviet prison sentence, it was announced Saturday.

The U.S. embassy said it received the money Saturday from North Little Rock, Ark., and sent it on to Leningrad, where Buel Wortham, 25, is imprisoned for black-marketing currency and stealing a statuette of a bear from a Russian hotel.

BIZARRE PROCEDURE

The money was deposited in the Leningrad bank account of the city court, which is expected to meet Monday or Tuesday to hear Wortham's petition for bail. Embassy sources expressed optimism the bizarre procedure might persuade the court to agree to bail.

It was considered possible Wortham might be out of jail by mid-week. In North Little Rock, Mayor William Laman said he was told the bail money might influence the court which will hear the appeal to change Wortham's sentence to a cash fine.

COMPANION FINED

The court sentenced Wortham Dec. 21 to three years in a labor camp. A companion, Craddock Gilmour, 24, of Salt Lake City, was fined $1,111 for his part in the black marketing.

Gilmour paid the fine after the trial and has left the country.

North Little Rock citizens chipped in about $2,000 through private subscription. It was understood the remaining $20,000 was borrowed from a bank.

Red Cross Short Many Pints

"Disappointing" was how A. T. Lashmar, superintendent of the Red Cross blood donor panel, described the response of Victorians during a three-day donor clinic Wednesday, Thursday and Friday.

He set a goal of 850 pints and got only 493, so "we shall just have to depend on other centres to make up the difference."

Mr. Lashmar said he had been satisfied with the 268 pints donated at Red Cross house Wednesday but the response from the navy and Queen's Own Rifles was not as high as usual. Some ships were out and there was only one unit at Work Point Barracks.

Push by Samaritans Costs Driver $377

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Samuel Snyder got his stalled car started, all right, but the push cost him $377.

The Washington motorist gladly accepted the offer of two pedestrians to get the car going again after the engine died at a downtown intersection, and just as gladly agreed to give the pair a lift in exchange, police said.

And as an extra bonus, Snyder dropped by his house to pick up a bottle of wine to give them, but one said he'd rather have a dollar instead. When Snyder pulled out his wallet one of the ex-samaritans pulled a gun and took it. The pair took the money and fled.

Labor Chief:

Organized Workers Stimulate Tourism

Organized labor should be given credit for the upsurge in tourism, Victoria Labor Council president Robert Barrie told council delegates last week.

Addressing the delegates from the floor shortly after announcing his intention to withdraw from candidacy for the post he had held for 10 years, Mr. Barrie said tourism, the province's third-largest industry, had been stimulated by the labor movement's activities.

'LOW RATE'

"It burns me up to hear all the people who take credit for it," he said, "also to see the service people (in motels) getting such a low rate of pay, 85 cents to $1 per hour."

"We in the labor movement should see about a higher rate of pay for them," he said, to applause from the delegates.

BETTER SALARIES

Mr. Barrie said the labor movement, by achieving holidays with pay and better salaries, had been directly responsible for enabling more workers to travel and to enjoy visits to other places.

"That is what built your motels along Gorge Road and other places in the city," he said.

COMPETITION

He added a word of caution: "Now that we are getting longer holidays, people are travelling farther. Cities are going to have to compete harder for the tourist dollar."

He said he deplored the fact that labor movement members who do travel must see service people — chambermaids, waitresses, etc. — receiving such low wages.

Mr. Barrie said organized labor had "just as many problems" as when he started taking an active part in labor matters, 13 years ago. He has been president of the Victoria council for 10 of those years, but declined to run for the annual election Jan. 18.

"Our present government will see to it we have plenty (of problems) to go on with," he added.

Mr. Barrie said he would continue to be active as a delegate in the council.

Nominations and elections will take place at the next council meeting.

Northwest Letter 'Indiscreet'—Laing

VANCOUVER (CP) — Northern Affairs Minister Arthur Laing said Saturday a letter by Commissioner B. G. Sivertz of the Northwest Territories demanding more political freedom for the NWT was "ungenerous, indiscreet and not factual."

The letter from Mr. Sivertz to the 12 members of the territorial council was intended to be confidential. It complained about the "inordinate delay" in carrying out the Carrothers Report on how the north might achieve more independence.

"We are going to make very great changes in the allocation of powers and location of powers because the new commissioner will be a resident of the Northwest Territories," Mr. Laing said in an interview.

"He will have an adequate group of public servants."

The minister said Mr. Sivertz was to have retired last August but was permitted to remain in his post until Jan. 16.

"It is quite obvious to me that Mr. Sivertz wanted me to make announcements to satisfy his retirement plans. I have no intention of being pressured into this sort of accommodation."

Meredith

UBC Post Given To Victorian

John R. Meredith of Victoria, the provincial assistant superintendent of education, was appointed Friday as a member of the senate of the University of British Columbia.

He was named by the provincial cabinet for a three-year period to replace Dr. J. F. K. English, whose term on the senate expired last fall.

ALSO CHAIRMAN

Dr. English, former deputy minister of education, has since been elected to the University of Victoria senate. He is also chairman of the Public Utilities Commission.

Mr. Meredith was educated in Victoria schools and at UBC, and taught high school in Victoria and Duncan before joining the education department as a research assistant in 1947.

ESQUIMALT VERSUS VICTORIA ON DOMESTIC WATER SUPPLY

One of the more bitter debates residents of Greater Victoria can look forward to this year will be on the right of a municipality to distribute its own domestic water supply.

At present, Victoria owns the Esquimalt water distribution system and pockets the profits from water consumption in that municipality.

Reeve Ray Bryant, backed by neighboring reeves on the Saanich Peninsula, wants Esquimalt to own its own water system.

Victoria, recognizing a nest-egg when it sees one, can be expected to turn a cold-shoulder to the Esquimalt demands.

Whatever the outcome of what promises to be a prolonged municipal struggle, one thing is sure: Journeymen Mechanics of the mechanical contracting trade will be the men who keep the water flowing—whether it's owned by Esquimalt or Victoria.

And if, as one day it must, an adequate supply of cheap domestic water is piped to the remote corners of the Saanich Peninsula, it will be those same Journeymen Mechanics who install the system down to the last faucet.

Packers Pack Awesome Credentials As First Super-Bowl Battle Looms

By JACK HAND

NEW YORK (AP)—There is a touch of magic in the name—Green Bay Packers.

From the days of Curley Lambeau Johnny Blood and Don Hutson to the golden era of Vince Lombardi, the Packers have been a power to be reckoned with in professional football.

There are over 1,700 stockholders among the 82,000 solid citizens of the smallest big league city. Regularly they pack 50,861 into Lambeau Stadium for the home games.

About 3,500 Packer-backers made the long trek to Dallas for the 1966 title game and many have made plans to follow the team to Los Angeles and the Super Bowl, Jan. 15, when Kansas City Chiefs, champions of the American Footbal League, will be met.

WON 10 TITLES

In the years since Lambeau talked the old Indian Packing Co. into putting up money for equipment in 1919, the Packers have won 10 National Football League championships. No other team has won three in a row as the Packers did in 1929, 1930, 1931 before the league was split into conferences for a post-season playoff. Green Bay has rolled up a fantastic 7-2 record in championship playoffs, including a 4-1 record under Lombardi.

When Lombardi left his job as an assistant coach with New York Giants and took over as the Packers' head coach and general manager in 1959, he inherited a team that had struggled through a 1-10-1 season in 1958, the Packers' worst record.

By shifting personnel already on the scene (moving Paul Hornung from quarterback to halfback, for example) and making astute trades for players like Willie Davis and Henry Jordan, Lombardi brought the team to the heights. He has kept them there by wise draft choices and judicious swaps for other team's draft rights.

LED CONFERENCE

Lombardi's first Packer team finished third with a 7-5 record, but he won the Western Conference in 1960, his second year, only to lose to Philadelphia in the title game. This was his only championship defeat.

A 37-0 romp over New York in 1961 and a 16-7 victory over the Giants in 1962 were followed by second-place finishes in both 1963 and 1964. The Packers took it all again in 1965, beating Baltimore Colts in a divisional playoff and then knocking off Cleveland Browns, the defending champs. Their 1966 regular season was climaxed last Sunday by the 34-27 title thriller with Dallas Cowboys.

STICK KTO BASIS

Lombardi's teams try to win by carrying out their assignments better than the other team, not by surprising them with radical innovations. The Packers did make some blocking changes for the Dallas game and their defence is an ever-changing maze, operating out of a basic 4-3 formation with four linemen up front and three linebackers.

The Packers seldom blitz (send linebackers after the passer).

That means the front four men in the defensive line—big, agile Willie Davis and ever-improving Lionel Aldridge at the ends and sturdy Ron Kostenlik and 10-year-man Henry Jordan at the tackles, put the big pressure on the passer—in this case it will be Len Dawson.

LINEBACKERS MOBILE

The linebackers move up quickly to meet the rush or peel off to pick up a pass receiver as the occasion demands.

Dave Robinson, on the left corner, is the man who put the heat on Don Meredith last Sunday. Ray Nitschke, the middle man, is a crasher and a devastating tackler. Lee Roy Caffey, the right linebacker, has the size (six-foot-three, 250) and the speed (fullback at Texas A. and M.) to bop the receiver at the line of scrimmage, close in on the runner or drop off to defend on the pass.

Herb Adderley, the left corner man or halfback, has been all-league for years. He and Bob Jeter, the right corner man, did the job on Bob Hayes last week. They will be on the watch for Otis Taylor and Chris Burford of the Chiefs.

Willie Wood, always the all-league free safety, is a wonder at being in the right place at the right time.

Tom Brown, the former (Washington) baseball player, is the strong safety with the job of covering tight end Fred Arbanas on passes. It was Brown who picked off that last desperation pass by Meredith Jan. 1.

The Packers' offence is of a conservative nature. In years past they played ball control, slogging into the line with Jim Taylor and Paul Hornung and passing just enough to keep the defence honest. Things have changed.

WELL BACK THIS YEAR

Taylor, usually a threat for the rushing title, finished 10th in the league with 705 yards. Hornung, bothered by a pinched nerve in his neck, gained only 200 yards and lost his halfback job to Elijah Pitts.

When the running game sagged a bit, quarterback Bart Starr really came into his own as a passer. Starr completed 62.2 per cent of his passes in regular season for 14 touchdowns and was intercepted only three times.

He threw four more TD passes against Dallas and hit with 19 of 28.

RECEIVERS APLENTY

Starr's top receivers were Taylor for short yardage and end Carroll Dale for the long bombs.

Flanker Boyd Dowler didn't catch a TD pass until the Dallas game, but he snared 29 passes in regular season and end Marv Fleming grabbed 31.

Hornung, of course, still is a primary receiver when healthy and it could just be that the Golden Boy will have that one last big day as a receiver against the Chiefs. Pitts also is

Chiefs Had Tortuous Climb To Earn Shot at Green Bay

By MIKE RATHET

NEW YORK (AP) — Kansas City Chiefs have been marked by disaster—both financial and physical—in their short history, but have managed to come out on top with a cast of characters that may be the most unusual in pro football.

Born and raised in Dallas as the Texans under the guiding hand of millionaire Lamar Hunt, the founder of the American Football League, the Chiefs have been a marked team of sports since the 1962 season.

IN LONGEST GAME

That was the year in which they won the AFL title in pro football's longest game, edging Houston Oilers 20-17 in a second sudden-death quarter. But while they had been artistically successful they also had been financially drained by the war with the National League's Dallas Cowboys.

And so Hunt took it to KC, where the Chiefs began to take a physical beating that may be unmatched in the history of any pro football team — but ultimately become the AFL's entry in the long-awaited Super Bowl game.

STARTED IN 1963

The first accident occurred during the 1963 exhibition season when Stone Johnson, a young hopeful, died as the result of a broken neck suffered in a game. And, only last year, fullback Mack Lee Hill died on an operating table while undergoing a knee operation.

In between guard Ed Budde and end Fred Arbanas have been assaulted on Kansas City streets while defensive tackle Ed Lothamer almost was decapitated in an auto accident before arriving at the Chiefs' training camp this year.

ONE-EYED STAR

Lothamer still is out of action but Budde and Arbanas have made their way back, gaining All-AFL status — Arbanas despite the fact that he has lost the sight of his left eye.

While Lothamer, Arbanas and Budde represent one side of the Chiefs' personality picture, there is the lighter side represented by such characters as E. J. N. (The Rancher) Holub, Fred (I'm The Greatest) Williamson and Sherrill (No Pain) Headrick.

Holub, a linebacker who has undergone seven operations on his knees, is a typical Texan—10-gallon hat, chewing tobacco and ranch back home. But he has turned sort of modern recently and among the comforts of his homestead now is a telephone.

NO SHRINKING VIOLET

Williamson is a defensive back and the Cassius Clay of his profession. A white shoe wearer who will tell you how handsome he is, Williamson does not shy away from telling you he's equally proficient at his job.

Headrick, another member of the linebacking corps, has pulled some crazy stunts in his career but is best known for the fact he has played with a variety of injuries, including a slipped disc and a dislocated thumb — which he personally jerked back into place.

QUITE A CREW

Some of their better-known compatriots are guard Curt Merz, the uncrowned hand-wrestling champion; safety Johnny Robinson, the No. 1 needler on the club, and Buck Buchanan, the 287-pound defensive tackle who may be the outstanding man in the world at the training table.

The ringmaster for the group is Hank Stram, the only coach the Texans-Chiefs ever had. An innovator who sent the Chiefs out in I formation when they beat Buffalo Bills for the AFL title last Sunday, Stram often has been criticized.

What his detractors said was that Stram had been given the best personnel in the league and had been unable to win with it since 1962. What Stram said was: "Give me speed and then we'll see."

GOT HIS SPEED

Stram's estimates were accurate. Given speed in the person of Mike Garrett, the 1965 Heisman Trophy winner from Southern California, the Chiefs romped to the Western Division title with an 11-2-1 record.

Garrett, the No. 2 draft choice of Los Angeles Rams, was picked only on the 20th round by the Chiefs, who figured the Rams had him locked up. But it didn't turn out that way when the Chiefs wrote a cheque in the neighborhood of $300,000.

LED IN AVERAGE

Garrett proved his value, giving the Chiefs what Stram said was "more long runs this season than we have had in several years." He finished in a tie for second among the rushing leaders, gaining 801 yards for a league-leading 5.5 average.

Garrett easily took his place in the Chiefs offence and despite his youth was called on consistently in key situations by Len Dawson, the quarterback Stram saw at Purdue and finally lured out of the National League.

Dawson again was the league's No. 1 quarterback this season, hitting 56 per cent of his passes and connecting for 26 touchdowns.

STANDOUT LINEMEN

There's little doubt that much of the Chiefs' success has to be credited to two of the biggest and strongest lines in pro football.

On the offensive line are two All-AFL performers, tackle Jim Tyrer at six-six and 292 pounds and guard Ed Budde at six-five and 260. On the other side are guard Curt Merz, six-four and 267, and tackle Dave Hill, six-five and 254.

Buchanan is the man mountain of the defensive front four which also includes another all-AFL selection, end Jerry Mays at six-four and 252.

So the Chiefs have weight, height, speed and personality. All that remains now is to see if they have enough to beat Green Bay Packers next Sunday.

a double threat as runner and catcher.

All of the Packers' kicking chores fall to Don Chandler, an 11-year veteran.

Lombardi made sparing use of his million-dollar bonus twins, Don Anderson and Jim Grabowski. They did most of their work on special teams, punt returns and kickoffs. Grabowski picked up a fumble and went in for a TD against Dallas. Anderson runs back kicks.

The Packer bench is deep and includes veteran end Max McGee and veteran quarterback Zeke Bratkowski, who has proved he can take over for Starr.

Uvic Wins Volleyball Tournament

VANCOUVER — University of Victoria won "B" class honors Saturday in the University of British Columbia Invitational Thunderette volleyball tournament.

The Island team composed of Ann Jeffrey, Vicki Sargeant, Gerry Cox, June Casbolt, Glenda Joyce, Jeanne Renfrew and Ann Wintemute, never lost a game in the tournament.

The Islanders defeated Marpole "B" by 15-7, 15-4; UBC Jayvees by 15-3 and 12-12 and Vancouver Jokers by 15-8 and 15-4 in roundrobin play to reach the final.

Then they defeated the Marpole team a second time, 15-10, 15-4, in the final.

The Uvic team also played three exhibition games, against Marpole No. 1, Marpole No. 2 and Washington Athletic Club, losing them all. Marpole No. 1 won the "A" class champion ship in the tournament.

Pro Gridders Bucking For All-Star Game

HOLLYWOOD, Fla. (AP) — The players' association of the National and American Football leagues said Friday that they are jointly proposing to the owners of both leagues an annual all-star football game between the leagues.

Details will be submitted by each association through their respective leagues within the next 60 days.

It was proposed that the games begin in January, 1968, and that proceeds be used in part for charity and in part for the players' pension plans.

Liverpool Snatches Lead As Manchester Sits Idle

LONDON (CP) — Defending champion Liverpool went to the top of the English Soccer League's First Division Saturday, turning back West Ham United 2-0 at home.

Manchester United, the previous leader, had its game at Newcastle postponed because of frost.

Liverpool has a better goal average than the Manchester club. Both teams have played 24 matches.

Two goals five minutes apart by forward Peter Thompson, both in the first half, were enough to give Liverpool victory.

Nottingham Forest stayed in third place with a 2-1 win at West Bromwich. Still fourth was Stoke City, 2-1 home winner against Everton. The referee made three inspections of the icy field before he decided play could start.

Behind Stoke was former leader Chelsea which, after eight matches without a win, beat Southampton 4-1.

STRETCHES LEAD

In Scotland, where the weather caused the postponement of two cup and six league matches, league-leading Celtic won its first game of the new year, 5-1. On a tricky field, Celtic was much too good for Dundee.

Celtic is five points ahead of Rangers, whose scheduled game against Aberdeen was postponed.

Eight-year-old Native Diver, making his first start since last July, won his 29th stakes race rather easily yesterday. There was quite a distance separating him from second Place Hoist Bar in the $62,050 San Carlos Handicap at Santa Anita. Most of Native Diver's competition was only half his age.

Leafs Show Old Form Slaughter Canucks, 7-0

By BRIAN DOHERTY

VANCOUVER 0, VICTORIA 7

Victoria Maple Leafs, springtime fresh in spite of a killing schedule, blossomed into their old form as they thrashed second-place Vancouver Canucks 7-0 in a Western Hockey League game here Saturday night.

The win moved the Leafs into a fifth-place tie with Los Angeles and left them only five points behind Vancouver.

It was the Leafs' fifth shutout of the season, tops in the league, and it came from a hustling offence, gritty defence and a brilliant goaling job by Gary Smith.

RID OF RUST

In his first four games with the Leafs, Smith allowed 20 goals. But Friday night in Vancouver he showed he has shaken off the cobwebs that gathered during limited action at Rochester when only one shot got past him as the Leafs won, 4-1.

It wasn't as if the Canucks didn't try. Gord Vejprava pounded two great shots within seconds of each other in the opening minutes of the second period on a power play but Smith was unbeatable.

Early in the third period, Marc Dufour shot from close range at an empty net and Smith somehow got his foot in the way.

	GP	W	L	T	F	A	Pts
Portland	37	23	7	7	158	101	53
Vancouver	36	18	16	3	126	104	39
Seattle	37	16	16	5	104	113	37
Oakland	34	15	13	6	109	113	36
Los Angeles	35	15	17	3	120	134	33
VICTORIA	37	14	18	5	113	116	33
San Diego	36	10	24	2	101	138	22

Next games: Tonight—Seattle at Oakland; Los Angeles at Portland.

The Canucks could manage just three shots on Smith in the first period yet trailed only, 1-0. That goal came while Carmichael was serving a Leaf bench penalty and the Canucks were on a power play.

Dick Lamoureux stole the puck and passed to Mike Labadie who hit the post with his shot. The puck bounced free and Labadie slammed it back in.

Larry Keenan showed he was right back in form after his injury lay-off and made Carmichael's goal. He got a break on Vancouver and passed perfectly for the hard-skating left-winger.

Marcetta got a share of the club point-scoring lead with Carmichael with two goals and an assist for a season total of 33 points.

Rollie Wilcox and Mike Laughton got the other Leaf goals as Andy Hebenton had two assists and just missed on two scoring attempts.

The win came at the end of a program which had the Leafs playing six games in eight nights.

Things ease off with the Los Angeles Blades here Wednesday and Saturday and the Oakland Seals coming up for two games the following week.

The Leafs had Canuck's goaltender Don Simmons sweating as the 35-year-old veteran was called on to stop 35 shots, 15 of them in the last period when the Leafs went in for three more goals.

Barlow's third goal of the season came when Simmons moved to the side of the net in an attempt to block play and was caught there.

New Yacht Beats Gretel

SYDNEY, Australia (AP) — Dame Pattie, Australia's new 12-metre yacht, led all the way Saturday in beating Gretel by 110 yards in the first of a long series of trials to determine the challenger for the America's Cup held by the United States.

Dame Pattie was skippered by Jock Sturrock, who handled Gretel in her 4-1 loss to the American Weatherly off Newport, R.I., in 1962.

The revamped Gretel was skippered by Archie Robertson, who was the standby helmsman for Sturrock and a member of the afterguard in the races four years ago.

Canadiens Grab Squeaker

DETROIT 3, MONTREAL 4

BOSTON 2, TORONTO 5

Detroit Red Wings have Paul Henderson back and Gordie Howe again leading their attack but unless they can do something about winning away from home ice they're not likely to become one of the four National Hockey League playoff clubs.

The Wings played their 16th game away from home last night, and failed to win for the 16th time although Howe gave them a 2-0 lead with his 12th and 13th goals of the season.

CAME FROM BEHIND

Montreal Canadiens came from behind to pick up a 4-3 win which boosted their fourth-place margin over the Wings to nine points with two games in hand.

On home ice, the Wings have been good, winning 11, losing five and tying two of 18 games while scoring 66 goals and allowing 43.

On the road, where they have been outscored, 31-72, the Wings have only a tie with Boston's last-place Bruins.

Next games—Tonight: Montreal at New York; Toronto at Detroit; Boston at Chicago.

RAPID PAIR

In a wide-open, free-skating game last night which featured some outstanding goalkeeping, particularly by Montreal's Charlie Hodge in the first period, the Wings were beaten by goals 30 seconds apart in the third period.

Howe got the only goal, cashing the rebound of a shot by Parker MacDonald, although the clubs levelled 29 shots at Hodge and Detroit's Roger Crozier, who was also brilliant.

HODGE SAVED DAY

Hodge saved Canadiens with great stops on breakaway chances for Alex Delvecchio, Norm Ullman and Ted Hampson but made a mistake in the second period as he gloved a long shot by Howe. The puck slipped out of his hand and into the net.

Only 32 seconds later, Canadiens got back into the game when a passout from behind the net by Ralph Backstrom deflected off John Ferguson's chest and the puck caromed behind Crozier.

WINGS PROTEST

Wings protested to no avail that the goal was illegal.

A great individual play by Dick Duff tied the score in the ninth minute of the third period. He beat Crozier with a sizzling backhand after stickhandling from the left side to the right.

Duff got what proved to be the winner less than five minutes later, driving the puck over Crozier, who had swept it out in a fantastic save on Henri Richard's try from the left.

Hampson set up Dean Prentice at 17:09 but the Wings couldn't manage a fourth goal.

In last night's other game, Toronto Maple Leafs' reshuffled lines proved effective in a 5-2 decision over Boston's hapless Bruins.

MAHOVLICH TIES GREATS

Frank Mahovlich opened the scoring for the Leafs with a goal which tied him for 12th place on the all-time list of NHL goal-scorers.

It was his 270th career goal, pulling him even with Aurel Joliat and Howie Morenz on the all-time list.

Pulford and Ellis each scored once and Ed Shack came up with his sixth and seventh goals of the season.

Result moved the third-place Leafs within three points of the lead and kept them four points ahead of Canadiens.

Dagg, Armstrong Advance

DUNCAN — Rinks skipped by Lyall Dagg and Jim Armstrong of Victoria, Jessie Whittam of Nanaimo and Glen Harper of Duncan all made their way into the next round of curling playdowns at the Duncan Curling Club on Saturday.

Mrs. Whittam, who is supported by Irene Schroh, Bunny Anderson and Isabel Pearson, made the biggest event. She won the Vancouver Island women's zone title in a round-robin final to qualify for the district playdowns.

She went through unbeaten, starting by defeating Nan Sexton of Allan's Curling Club, 14-4. Then Mrs. Whittam came up with a last-rock takeout in the key game to defeat Dorothy Fukuyama of Victoria, 9-8, before clinching it with an 11-4 win over Sybil Magnusson of Port Alberni.

Mrs. Fukuyama, who bested Mrs. Magnusson, 10-8, and Mrs. Sexton, 7-5, around her loss to the Island champion, finished second with a 2-1 record.

Mrs. Sexton's rink, substituting for Marg Brillinger's Esquimalt rink, which qualified for the Island final but had to give up its chance because of illness, was next with a 1-2 record. Her win was by 9-8 over Mrs. Magnusson.

ISLAND FINALISTS

Dagg and Harper became the first two of the four rinks which will represent the South in the Island final here Jan. 21 when they won their first two games in the eight-rink, double knockout competition.

Dagg (Ray Dagg, Jack Trueman, Barry Harvey) looked the sharpest of all in a day of patchy curling as he defeated Don Edi of Esquimalt, 15-8, and Harvey Thomson of Esquimalt, 13-4.

Harper (Harvey Hodge, Gary Merrett, Vern Kaspick) downed Iner Hemstad of Allan's, 13-8, then finished fast to polish off Bob Bell of Duncan, 12-8, in the other "A" semi-final.

HIGH SCHOOL CHAMPS

Armstrong (Gordie Paterson, Torrey Gillott, Dave Vyner, won the South Island high school championship in a playoff with two other Victoria area rinks and one rink from Duncan.

The Esquimalt students will now play a best-of-three Island final against the Northern winner here next weekend for the right to carry on to the Pacific Coast Curling Association final.

Victoria High Stays Unbeaten

Lord Byng built up a six point half-time lead and held on to defeat Oak Bay, 48-45, Saturday in an exciting exhibition high school boys exhibition game at Oak Bay High School.

Don Burrows sparked the Bays with 17 points but Byng refused to lose another close one to a Victoria team.

SECOND WIN

Victoria High made it a perfect weekend by downing Burnaby Central, 42-30, behind the 14 point performance of Ollie Moilanen.

Glen MacKenzie topped the losers with nine points.

ONE-SIDED WIN

In the first game of the evening, Courtenay High trounced Oak Bay, 54-30, in a girls game. Heather Witzel with 19 points and her sister Rose with 12 paced the win.

Terry Neal led Oak Bay with eight points.

Record Shotput

SAN FRANCISCO (AP)—Oregon's Neal Steinhauer shattered the world indoor shotput record with his second throw Saturday night, a 66-foot 6¾-inch toss in the All-American Games here.

After a 59-foot 10-inch effort on his first throw, the Oregonian heaved the 16-pound ball well past the 64-foot 11¾-inch mark set in 1962 by Gary Gubner of New York.

VIEWS of SPORT

By Red Smith

If anybody doubts that professional football has become a one-man game, he might consider these figures:

Over the last two seasons, the St. Louis Cardinals' record of games won, lost and tied was 11-2-1 when their good quarterback, Charlie Johnson, was fit and 2-12 when Johnson was ailing or unavailable.

In other words, a good team with a top quarterback can be beaten now and then and a good team without a first-rate quarterback can win once in a while, but the quarterback is the difference between first place and last.

The Green Bay Packers and the Kansas City Chiefs are good football teams. Len Dawson of the Chiefs is a good quarterback, the best passer in the American League, a competent scrambler when he has to scramble, and a leader who, says Hank Stram, his coach in college and the pros, "either makes the big play or brings it out of one of the others."

Bart Starr of Green Bay is a great quarterback, and this is the chief reason why the Packers are regarded here as the logical favorites to join the affluent society en masse when the loot is whacked up after the first annual Gravy Bowl a week from Sunday.

Nice Boy from Alabama

As a landslide winner of the National League's most valuable player award, Starr has at long last, in his 11th season as a professional, won general recognition for the qualities Vince Lombardi saw in him when Lombardi arrived in Green Bay eight years ago.

"When I joined this team," the coach told Bill Heinz, when they were writing "Run To Daylight!" three years ago, "the opinion around here and in the league was that Starr would never make it. They said he couldn't throw well enough and wasn't tough enough, that he had no confidence in himself and no one had confidence in him. . . .

"After looking at the movies that first pre-season, I came to the conclusion that he did have the ability — the arm, the ball-handling techniques and the intelligence — but what he needed was confidence.

"He is the son of a Regular Army master sergeant and he grew up on Army posts and Air Force bases and he still calls me 'Sir.' When I first met him he struck me as so polite and so self-effacing that I wondered if maybe he wasn't too nice a boy to be the authoritarian leader your quarterback must be.

"He impressed me getting ready for our first pre-season game in 1959. At our quarterback meetings, even though he was not first-string, he could repeat almost verbatim everything we had discussed the previous three days and that meant he had a great memory, dedication, and desire. With our success and his own success I have seen his confidence grow.

"'A couple of years ago,' he said to me the day last summer when he brought his contract into the office, 'I'd have signed anything you gave me, but now you've taught me to be more aggressive and self-assertive and you've given me more confidence, and this is what I want.'

"'So that's it,' I said. 'Like Frankenstein, I've created a monster'."

In another part of the book Lombardi says: "He is great at picking that defence apart and adjusting, and if I could just get him to be a little more daring he'd be everything. He kills them with those short ones, those singles and doubles, but he doesn't throw for those home runs often because, where Unitas or Layne or Tittle will take a chance with an offensive man and a defensive man going down the field together, he has to be sure that his offensive man has that defensive man beaten."

Bart Maverick of Tomorrow

If Vince had a single mental reservation about Starr three years ago, it was because of the quarterback's preference for conservative play, and even that has changed. Maybe the coach conned him out of it or perhaps Bart saw what happened to Goldwater and decided for himself that a little extremism in pursuit of money was no sin.

Anyhow, that was a plunger who led the Packers to the NFL championship last Sunday. After the Cowboys recovered from a 14-0 deficit to tie the score, he rocked them with a 51-yard bomb to Carroll Dale.

In the last four minutes with the Packers seven points in front he did not run scared. Time and again he put the ball in the air in Green Bay territory going boldly for the first down and defying Dallas to intercept.

"Starr will be 33 years old next Tuesday and it's time he started thinking about an easier way to make a living. Off what he has shown, the advice here would be to get a deck of cards and work the Mississippi river steamboats. He figures to have the stake for it after Jan. 15.

Luckless Macs Stay in Cellar

COFFEE MACS 69, WHITE SPOTS 74

VANCOUVER—Victoria's outluckled Coffee Macs lost another close one here Saturday night and remained in last place in the Inter-City Men's Basketball League when they were beaten by Vancouver White Spots, 74-69.

	GP	W	L	F	A	Pts
Vancouver IGA	6	5	1	440	361	10
White Spots	5	3	2	340	308	6

Victoria	5	1	4	345	383	2

Wasted was a standout performance by rookie Mike Lauvaas, who hit from all over the floor and played a strong game on the boards as he marked up a game high of 31 points.

FOURTH LOSS

Loss was the fourth in five league games for the Islanders, who have scored only 16 points fewer than they have allowed.

Last night, the difference came in the second quarter, the White Spots outscoring their rivals, 18-12 to take a 32-25 lead into the second half.

Both clubs scored 21 points in the third quarter with Ian Hunter stopping a Victoria comeback by getting eight of his 13 points. Coffee Macs pushed within three points in the last 10 minutes but could never get ahead.

Losers were handicapped by injuries which forced Ken Gregory to be under par on a gimpy ankle and resulted in Skip Ward missing most of the second half with bruised heels.

Coffee Macs play Vancouver IGA here this afternoon to complete their weekend schedule.

Bests Europe's Best

Nancy Back in Form: Nabs German Slalom

OBERSTAUFEN, Germany (UPI) — Europe's top women skiers gave way Saturday to an in-form Nancy Greene of Canada, who overcame a first run deficit to win the special slalom of the Staufen cup ladies ski races.

Miss Greene, 23, was trailing Switzerland's Fernande Bochatey and French world champion Annie Famose after the first heat, but she pulled out all the stops in the second heat to win by an aggregate one-tenth of a second.

Local experts expressed little surprise over the Canadian girl's times of 42.38 and 37.15 seconds. They described her as one of the world's best slalom specialists and noted she posted the best first heat time in the world championships at Portillo, Chile, last summer, although a relatively bad second-leg time left her in seventh place in the standings.

In the previous year at Oberstaufen she also turned in the best time in her first run, but missed a gate in the second and was disqualified.

"I am terribly pleased over this win," Miss Greene said especially after I have been followed by pretty bad luck."

She is a student at Notre Dame university at Nelson, British Columbia, and is only able to race in Europe for three weeks each year.

Miss Bochatey was fastest on Saturday's first run, with a time of 41.3 seconds, followed by Miss Famose in 41.40, and French Olympic champion Christine Beranger-Goittschel in 42.07. Miss Greene was fourth.

TERRIFIC SECOND RUN

On the second run, however, it was a different story. The Canadian girl swung through the gates at a terrific clip in clock 37.155 seconds, with Florence Steurer of France second in 37.93, Miss Goittschel in 37.99, and Miss Bochatey in 38.12.

Miss Greene's aggregate time of 79.33 seconds gave her the edge over Miss Bochatey, who clocked 79.43 and Miss Famose with 80.69.

One unlucky skier was Penny McCoy of Bishop, Calif., on her first trip to Europe as a member of the American team. She missed a gate and was disqualified.

Other American placings in Saturday's competition, which was held on a fast and excellent course, were 28th place to Sandra Shellworth of Boise, Idaho, and 33rd place to Susan Chaffee.

British Champ

Michael Greenwood, son of Dr. Kemble Greenwood of Victoria, Saturday won the Evans Cup, emblematic of the British schoolboys' squash championship, at the Bath Club in London. The 17-year-old Victorian, B.C. junior champion in 1965, won the final, 9-2, 9-1, 9-3.

Al Small of Powell River and Arnie Dugan of Nanaimo top the Pacific Coast Amateur Hockey League scoring race with 18 points each.

Jim Peterson, one point behind the leaders, and Bud Dumont of Nanaimo lead the goal scorers with nine. Dugan and Pete Nuttall of Port Alberni each have 12 assists to lead the league.

Uvic	10	2	6	1	70	139	5
Occidens	10	2	7	0	33	111	4

Leaders in the Victoria Rugby Union's second division had their hands full yesterday in the two games played.

Leading James Bay Athletic Association was held to an 8-8 draw by fifth-place University of Victoria and second-place Oak Bay Wanderers were trounced, 11-0, by the Canadian Forces Base entry, now only one point behind the runners-up.

In an exhibition game between two first division clubs at University of Victoria, Wanderers outscored the host club, 11-5.

At Macdonald Park, Dave Goodman and Don McNamee scored trys for JBAA and Vince Callender kicked one convert. Dave Slater and Mel McDonald scored the trys for Uvic and Rick Pyke made good on one convert try.

At Colville Road, Bill Sorsdahl, Bob Price and Bert Berthiaune scored trys for CFB and Will Lennox kicked a convert.

Art Burgess led the Wanderers in the exhibition game by converting trys by Ken Wilie and Paul Carnes and made a penalty kick. Don Manning went over for the University team and Dan Evans kicked the convert.

Shooting from Lip Costs Toe Dearly

MONTREAL (CP) — Toe Blake, coach of Montreal Canadiens of the National Hockey League, has been fined $200 by league president Clarence Campbell after a review of an incident in Detroit last Sunday night.

Late in the third period of Montreal's 4-1 loss to the Red Wings, Blake was ejected from the game by referee Vern Buffey.

After a meeting with Blake and Buffey Campbell said in a statement:

ABUSIVE LANGUAGE

"The facts are that Buffey imposed a bench penalty against Canadiens when Blake used abusive language in a loud voice in criticizing Buffey as play progressed for not calling a penalty against Detroit."

When play was about to resume following the imposition of the bench minor, Blake continued to criticize the referee in a loud voice and stood up on his players' bench with one foot on the boards, and was finally ejected by Buffey.

O'Keefes Remain Stainless As Thunderbirds Skunked

By ROBIN JEFFREY

For the University of British Columbia Thunderbirds, Saturday was a day of disappointment — like spending three weeks on an essay and getting a C, or $20 on a date and getting a handshake at the door.

Thuderbirds played some good soccer against Victoria O'Keefes at Macdonald Park. They made enough openings to get at least a tie. But O'Keefes were the better opportunists, and they came away with a 2-0 Pacific Coast Soccer League victory before 576 fans.

STILL UNBEATEN

The win maintained O'Keefes unbeaten streak this season and pushed them back to the top of the league, one point ahead of Vancouver Columbus, Columbus, however, plays Burnaby Villa today.

After a goal by Victoria's Ike MacKay was disallowed at the three-minute mark (MacKay had fouled a defender), UBC took control for much of the remainder of the half.

BERRY SHINES

Fullback Jim Berry, one of the best backs in the PCSL and certainly the most exciting, had three shots on O'Keefes' Barry Sadler in the next 15 minutes. He had Sadler beaten with a lob at 12 minutes, but the ball hit the bar and was cleared.

Sadler pushed a dizzler from Ash Valdal, a former Victorian, over the bar, and Dave Stothard had to clear a dribbler off the goal line with Sadler beaten.

MISSED BIG CHANCE

With the Victoria defenders in semi-permanent discomfort, the students missed their best chance of the match at 36 minutes.

Sadler and Hamilton looked at each other and hesitated on a through pass. Centre forward Kirby Carter nipped between them and directed a weak, sharp-angled shot at the gaping goal. But fullback Don McIntosh raced across to clear.

That close call had one result. Stothard moved to centrehalf and Hamilton went to right back. It was a happy switch for Victoria as Stothard went on to have his best game of the season and settle the shaky defence.

O'KEEFES BOUNCE BACK

From there, O'Keefes came back. Dune McCaig replaced Ike MacKay on a wing (partly a defensive measure to mark Berry, the marauding fullback) and Jim Schulz missed a great chance when a cross from Bert Soutar put him alone in front of UBC goalie Bruce Ballam. Ballam pushed the shot out for a corner.

And it was Jim Menzies, O'Keefes' leading scorer, who got the go-ahead goal seconds before halftime.

BURST BY MENZIES

McCaig chipped the ball into the goalmouth, Peter Brett headed it down, and although Ballam managed to get his fingers to the ball, Menzies burst through to slither it home from about eight yards.

It was his eighth goal of the season and came despite some close checking and special attention from UBC halfback Russ Hillman.

UBC had 15 shots to Victoria's 12 in the first half, but the clubs each had seven shots on goal.

After the interval, the Victoria team maintained the edge it gained in the last 10 minutes of the first half. O'Keefes had 12 shots (six on goal) to the students' eight (three on goal). But the tempo slowed and some of the first half excitement disappeared.

And it was the younger UBC team which seemed to tire, although it always looked capable of grabbing a tie.

But with about four minutes left, Schulz ended that possibility when he finished off quick passes between McCaig and Menzies by left-footing the ball past Ballam from 10 yards.

Over the match, Victoria had 14 corners to UBC's nine, and referee Jack Adams called 13 fouls against the Thunderbirds and eight against O'Keefes.

Victoria plays in Vancouver next weekend against Firefighters.

THUNDERBIRDS — Bruce Ballam; Jim Berry, Len Lendvoy; Bill Sinclair, Gene Rose, Russ Hillman; Jim Jamieson, Ash Valdal, Kirby Carter, Harvey Thom, John Newfold. Reserves: John Humphries, Harry Lendvoy, Keith Brookes, Joe Johnson.

City Soccermen Back in Action

Victoria and District Soccer League resumes play today after a two-week layoff and both divisions can expect leadership changes.

Hourigan Kickers, first division leaders, have drawn a bye this week, and Canadian Scottish could take over first with a victory over Luckies at Heywood Avenue Park.

Should Luckies hold Scottish to a draw or come up with an upset win then Red Lions, two points behind Kickers, could move into a share of the lead by defeating the improving Victoria West club at Bullen Park.

In the other first division games, Tally-Ho meets Navy at Naden and University Vikings play Gorge Molsons at upper Topaz Park, a change from Central Park.

The tight second division race features co-leaders Island Tug and University Vikings playing at the Gordon Head Campus.

London Boxing Club plays Gorge at upper Beacon Hill Park and Falcons and Sidney meet on the lower pitch in the other matches.

The scheduled Victoria West and Colony Lions match has been postponed due to wet grounds.

All games start at 2 p.m.

Minor Soccer Washed Out

Rain forced postponement of most of Saturday's games in the Lower Island Juvenile Soccer League.

Results of games played:

Division III — Trafalgar Legion 7, Lakehill 0; Gorge 7, Esquimalt Meat Market 0.

Division IV — University Realty 6, Gorge FC 3; View Royal 6, White's Shopeasy 2; Lakehill 3, Evening Optimists 1; Boys Club 5, Peninsula Flyers 0.

Division V — Gorge FC 2, Gordon Head Shell 0; Boys Club 3, Eagles 0.

Grid Colts Given Edge

MIAMI, Fla. (A) — With Johnny Unitas healthy, the Baltimore Colts are favored to beat the Philadelphia Eagles by a touchdown today in the National Football League's Pro Playoff Bowl.

In good passing form in Miami workouts, the veteran Unitas appeared to have shaken off the effects of a sore shoulder incurred in a Nov. 13 game with Atlanta and rib bruises inflicted by Green Bay Dec. 10.

With Unitas as the top drawing card, the game which has broken attendance records four years in a row, could be a sell-out for the first time in the 72,000-seat Orange Bowl. It came close last year when 65,560 watched Baltimore beat Dallas 35-3.

Weight Control Tricky Problem

Are you losing the battle against the bulges? Have you cut your eating in half, only to find that you are still gaining weight? Then perhaps you really don't understand how weight control works. Test your knowledge by answering this true-false test.

● Coffee is not fattening.

● Since the new carbonated beverages contain almost no calories, they may be consumed as much as desired.

● Salt consumption bears no relationship to weight problems.

● Plenty of sleep, including naps, is advisable.

The answer to each statement is "False," says Dr. Robert Haskell. He discussed these topics at a national convention of the American Society of Bariatrics. This society is concerned with weight control.

There is evidence, says Dr. Haskell, that coffee can be fattening. Coffee stimulates the pancreas to secrete insulin. This sets off a whole chain of reactions, all of which lead to the deposition of fat. So he permits no more than two cups of coffee per day.

Although the new low-calorie carbonated beverages contain almost no calories, they do contain a sodium salt. That, plus the fact that they are carbonated, lend themselves to fluid retention. Dr. Haskell therefore limits intake to a maximum of three bottles per week.

Excessive amounts of salt in one's diet, of course, have the same effect.

Eight hours of sleep at night are fine, but skip the naps. You burn up lots more fat while up and about.

Energy-packed Dr. Haskell, who stand 5' 8" and weighs 138 pounds, suggests you eat three meals a day, but take nothing in between except fluids. Don't nibble, using food as a pacifier. And come alive — get going!

"Recently a study was made of two groups of Girl Scouts, one chubby, the other thin," he told me. "They were put on identical diets. The chubby girls gained, but the thin ones didn't." Why?

"Well, it was observed that the slim girls moved fast and often. The chubby girls paused and thought before making a move, and if they could, they avoided one. This is a problem of all overweight people— they have to shake themselves out of their inertia."

"Is heredity a big factor in overweight?" I asked him.

"I don't think too much so. Mainly, the factor is environmental due to family eating habits. Dad may devour so much that you feel 'chicken' if you don't eat as much."

What if Mother insists on foods you feel are fattening?

"The two of you should then talk to your family doctor so that he can explain the kind of foods and weight control program you need. Perhaps she has been plying you with food because she was trying to make up for being away from home, leaving you alone while she was working, or playing bridge."

What if you have unusually large calves or thighs? Can diet reduce them?

"Aside from general overweight, which can be reduced by diet and exercise, this condition might indicate a hormone inbalance. That calls for a doctor's treatment by medication."

Getting rid of extreme fat, Dr. Haskell concluded, can increase your life span by five to seven years. So watch that scale when it shows you 10 per cent heavier than the standard for your size and age. And remember, the main producer of pounds is too much food, with too little exercise!

For Kitte Turmell's free leaflet, Facts About Weight and Height for Teen-Agers, including a chart published by the American Medical Association, send your request with a self-addressed stamped envelope, care of this newspaper. This fact-packed leaflet tells how to determine what's the right size for you, and cut down on overweight.

Going-Steady Dream Can Be Unrealistic

"Dear Kitte Turmell: I am deeply in love with a girl who says she likes me, too.

"But the, when I ask her to go someplace with me, she is always going to a party or somewhere. Even when she's not, she won't walk with me because a girl friend of hers is around. I want to know whether I should keep on loving her or forget. Either she can't go steady or she won't. Please help. Wondering"

Dear Wondering: Think and talk in terms of liking, not loving her. If she doesn't think enough of you to walk with you, you are not realistic to be dreaming about going steady for a long time ahead. Maybe she's too young or inexperienced to pay attention to any boy in particular — perhaps her parents won't permit. Since, apparently, you do find ways to talk, make the most of those chances to get to know each other better and be content with that for awhile.

"Dear Kitte: I have been having this problem with a boy. As it seems to me, he is telling everybody that we have been going together for two years, and are going steady. This is news to me. Why doesn't he tell me about it? He has been calling me and saying he'll be over; he does not show up. I wait and wait. This has happened six times. I hear he has been seeing another girl.

Help Needed Now

"I like him so much and he tells other people he likes me but does not tell me. If I am with another boy, he says, 'leave her alone, she's mine.' And yet he runs around. I need help in a hurry. Puzzled"

Dear Puzzled: Tell him you don't want him to spread the word that you are going steady — because you are not, and never agreed to, and are not ready to. Make it plain you like him but feel both should be free to be friendly with others, too. Then, curb your jealousy if he dates others and remind him he has no right to tell others you belong to him.

"Dear Kitte: I am a girl 13 and like a boy 14. He is very nice and polite. How can I find out for sure that he likes me? Girl-Likes-Boy"

Dear Girl-Likes-Boy: Assume he likes you unless you give him cause to dislike you.

"Dear Kitte: There's this boy who likes me but I can't stand him. How can I tell him to flake off without hurting his feelings? He's in high school and I'm only in the 7th grade. Bothered"

Dear Bothered: Tell him he's too old for you and that it's better for you to devote your time and attention to classmates, which is true. To ease the blow tell him you appreciate his friendship but have no interest in him as a date.

The Week in Records

Berets Led the Continent

By MARY LEE BURROWS

According to national record charts, 1966 across North America was far different from 1966 in Victoria.

The top singles on national charts for '66 were:

1. The Ballad of the Green Berets by S-Sgt. Barry Sadler, and California Dreamin' by the Mamas and the Papas. 2. Sounds of Silence by Simon and Garfunkle, 3. Sunny by Bobby Hebb, 4. Strangers in the Night by Frank Sinatra, 5. You Can't Hurry Love by the Supremes.

Herb Alpert and the Tijuana Brass had five of the top ten albums. And the best group of the year was the Beatles.

The Electric Prunes use eight separate electronic amplifiers to produce their wild sound.

That strange second voice in the background of Sunshine Superman by Donovan belongs to Paul McCartney.

Up 'n' Comers: California Nights by Lesley Gore, Little Black Egg by the Nightcrawlers, The Beat Goes On by Sonny and Cher, For What It's Worth by the Buffalo Springfield.

Saanich Reeve's Outlook:

Unanimous No Probable For Formal Witty Price

Reeve High Curtis says the Witty brothers' formal request for $300,000 for their Metchosin seaside property would probably be unacceptable to every single member of the Capital Regional Board.

Speaking as chairman of the board, he said a $100,000 offer was made as the result of a "qualified appraisal and we would have no justification to meet any price greater than that."

Stanley and Leslie Witty, owners of the 44-acre site known locally as Witty's Lagoon, have engaged lawyer Patrick Sinnott to press their demand for $300,000.

Mr. Sinnott has filed a formal claim for compensation with the board, which has announced it will start expropriation proceedings against the Wittys.

The board wants the land as a park site.

Reeve Curtis said the board is dealing with taxpayers' money and "to say the least, it would be wrong for us not to take the advice of our appraisers."

Mr. Sinnott said:

"My clients regret the arbitrary proceedings taken by the persons responsible and they are aware that the majority of residents in the area of Metchosin fully appreciate the costly undertaking which will result from the establishment of a public park in this sparsely-populated district, where there is no necessity therefor."

Reeve Curtis replied:

"If it's so sparsely-populated, why is its value placed at $300,000? No one likes expropriation but I have no regrets under these circumstances. The property is quite important for public enjoyment."

Vietnam Group 'Not Political'

Canada is the "most effective ally" of the U.S. in the Vietnam war, the chairman of the Victoria Committee on Canadian Responsibility in Vietnam said Friday.

Social worker William Lawson added: "Without Canadian support, it is doubtful the Americans would have been able to build up the war."

ALMOST DOUBLED

He charged that, because of the U.S. arms buildup in Vietnam, Canadian sales of munitions to the U.S. have "almost doubled since the start of the war."

The group last week issued a pamphlet attacking Canada's "so-called neutrality" in the war as a member of the International Control Commission.

Mr. Lawson said the committee has no political affiliation.

"The group is not highly organized," he said. "We want to keep it free and flexible."

ANOTHER 200

The committee has 15 active members and another 200 people have participated in its demonstrations and given it support.

Members of the committee have been staging silent vigils each week in downtown Victoria.

"Many people read the leaflets and then stand with us," said Mr. Lawson. "We've never seen a leaflet thrown on the street."

Top 20 in Victoria

1. Snoopy vs. Red Baron — The Royal Guardsmen
2. I'm a Believer — The Monkees
3. Words of Love — The Mama's & Papa's

Dockyard Man Ends Busy Career

By RAY WORMALD

Tom Anderson figures he was probably the first "moonlighter" in HMC Dockyard.

It was April of 1922. Tom was 15 and had a Colonist paper route which included the then small naval base area at Esquimalt. He got to know Engineer Commander G. P. Clarke, the Dockyard manager, was offered a job as an office boy in the manager's office, and took it.

The job started with a six month probation period, and young Tom wasn't going to take any chances. He kept his paper route, getting up beore 4 every morning, delivering his 75 to 80 newspapers, dashing home for breakfast and starting his Dockyard work at 8.

He started with the Dockyard April 11 of that year. Last month, nearly 45 years later, he retired.

Thomas Anderson was born in Glasgow 60 years ago. He came to Canada with his parents when he was five, and then directly to Victoria. When he started at the naval base, Tom was earning $300 — a year.

He remained with the manager's office for two years, then transferred to the naval stores department where he remained until his retirement.

The fleet at Esquimalt was small when he started his service — one destroyer, HMCS Patrician, two small minesweepers and two fisheries patrol vessels.

Many Highlights

There were fewer than 100 civilian personnel, who worked from 8 in the morning until 4:30 in the afternoon — and Saturday mornings.

There have been may highlights in the Dockyard service life of Tom Anderson. One took place around 1925 when a large squadron of warships from the British West Indies fleet visited Esquimalt.

They included cruisers and battleships. Tom remembers them all ... the Danae, Delhi, Dauntless and the Dragon ... the Hood and the Repulse. The huge battleships Hood and Repulse couldn't squeeze into Esquimalt Harbor; they docked at Victoria's Outer Wharves.

His early duties included the hauling of firewood into six or seven Dockyard buildings where heat originated from open fireplaces. He had a great circuit involving the refilling of inkwells . . . "and I always had to carry two bottles ... one red and one blue".

He collected, sorted and delivered all the Dockyard mail. He was also a member of the original Dockyard fire department, at that time under RCMP jurisidiction.

In 1935 Tom married Myrtle Bennett — a member of a pioneer Victoria family. They have two daughters and one son — all of whom live in Victoria.

Next April, Tom and Myrtle will board a great liner for England and Scotland, returning in August. On the way home, they'll visit Expo 67.

What then? Tom's hobbies include swimming, tennis, badminton and reading — and the large garden of their home at 2739 Graham.

People like Tom Anderson never have time on their hands.

What a Colonist Newspaper Route Means to

ARTHUR PIKE

Colonist carrier Arthur Pike, 15, of 648 Baxter, hopes to some day be a draftsman or automotive mechanic.

At present though his newspaper route suffices in bringing the businessman out of him.

"It's good business training and teaches you how to meet people," Arthur says. "I'm very happy with my route and plan to continue on it as long as possible."

A Grade 10 Vocational student at Victoria Senior Secondary School, Arthur is in the top third of his class and hopes to carry on to technical school.

Having delivered the Colonist three years now, Arthur has won many awards for excellent delivery service including monthly certificates, four crests, two wallets, a pen and pencil set and a briefcase.

With 69 customers on his route, he earns about $35 a month and has used part of his profits to purchase a set of drums, a 10-speed racing bike, a hydroplane and motor, Christmas presents and his own clothes, besides having a sizeable bank account.

A musician of no mean note, Arthur also hunts and fishes, and plays soccer. He is a member of the Fish and Game Club.

Arthur lives at home with his parents, Mr. and Mrs. Percy Pike, and a brother and sister. His dad is employed at the Esquimalt Dockyard.

His favorite school subjects, Shopwork and Science, indicate he could be well on his way to his chosen career.

Logger May Suffer Writer's Cramp

A 19-year-old Port Alberni logger in city jail this weekend may suffer writer's cramp before being sentenced Monday by Magistrate William Ostler.

The magistrate ordered the young driver to copy in his own handwriting a 2,800-word magazine article which describes in graphic detail macabre sights viewed by police officers attending highway accidents.

Walter R. Parke was arrested after he fled in his car early Saturday after it slammed into a police truck at Government and Johnson, knocking the truck into a parked police cruiser.

Constable Reg Knight, a passenger in the police truck, was treated at Royal Jubilee Hospital's emergency ward for neck and shoulder injuries.

THREE CHARGES

The Alberni youth pleaded guilty to charges of dangerous driving, failing to remain at the scene of an accident and being a minor without insurance, when he appeared in central magistrate's court Saturday morning.

Court was told the youth was driving north on Government and had gone through the red light at Johnson when the accident occurred.

LEFT SCENE

He left the scene at a speed estimated between 50 and 60 miles an hour, court was told.

The youth drove north on Government to Pandora, along Pandora to Douglas, and south on Douglas.

He ignored the red light at Douglas and Johnson and narrowly missed a pedestrian making his way across Douglas in the crosswalk.

HIGH READING

He gave a breathalyser reading of .21 per cent.

Magistrate Ostler told the accused he would be supplied with writing materials and in his own handwriting he would transcribe the article And Sudden Death.

The accused was told he would be sentenced Monday if the article had been copied. If not he would be remanded until it was finished.

The magistrate also warned if Parke received help in the copying he would be remanded for a week and would write the article a dozen times.

Bernard W. Laycock, 617 Battery, was fined $350 and had his driver's licence suspended after he pleaded guilty to a charge of impaired driving.

The accused was apprehended shortly after 9 p.m. Friday after police noticed he was having difficulty parking his car on Yates Street.

Gellar C. Simle, 1501 Glentana, pleaded guilty to a charge of impaired driving and also of not having a current driver's licence.

He was fined $350 and $25 respectively.

He had been apprehended about 7:20 p.m. Friday after being involved in a minor car accident at Hillside and Government.

Oozing Items Homely Error

Navy bomb disposal experts were called to de-activate two suspicious-looking parcels on St. Charles Street near Regents Place late last week.

A nearby resident reported to city police the two parcels were in the rainsoaked street.

The police took one look at them, noticed what appeared to be a yellow fluid oozing from the soggy parcels and called the bomb disposal squad.

The servicemen subjected the parcels to some preliminary tests and then noticed a Belmont address on one of the parcels.

A quick check at the address solved the mystery.

The woman of the house had given her husband two parcels to mail. He had placed them on the roof of his car, then forgot about them and drove off to work.

The parcels contained a pair of slippers and a dressing gown. The yellow was believed to have come from the paper.

Minister Worried By Record Injury Number

Federal government and Crown agency employees have been asked to place "renewed emphasis on their safety and accident prevention programs and policies," in an attempt to curb an increase in work injuries to federal employees.

Federal Minister of Labor John R. Nicholson made the request following the release of statistics showing an increase of 1.4 per cent in accidents during the 1965-66 fiscal year.

INCREASE

The report showed 19,756 work injuries an increase of 280 over the previous year.

The increase was not significant, Mr. Nicholson said, except for the fact the rate of accidents was already too high.

Of the accidents reported, 11,739 were of a minor nature, and the balance included 4,656 cases involving injury leave, 2,932 compensation cases and 24 fatalities.

TOTAL COST

Total cost of these work injuries, including compensation benefits, salaries paid in lieu of compensation and administration expenses, was almost $4,600,000. 16 per cent higher than the previous fiscal year.

The time loss was the equivalent to one year's work by approximately 730 employees.

'ALWAYS STRIVE'

"While we always strive to avoid waste in the functions of our federal administration," said Mr. Nicholson, "this wastage of our human resources must be viewed as particularly abhorrent."

Seven of the fatalities occurred in traffic accidents, five in aircraft crashes, and four were drownings. The 24 fatalities widowed 20 women and left 38 children fatherless.

DIRECT COST

The direct cost of these occupational injuries averaged out to about $19 for each of the 237,000 persons covered by the Government Employees' Compensation Act.

"While this is considerably lower than the average cost per capita in private industry," Mr. Nicholson said, "I am confident that, with a more vigorous approach to safety and with the co-operation and support of all branches of the public service, we can set an even better example."

Car Crunch Boosts Toll

NEW YORK (AP) — Accidents killed 117,000 persons in the United States last year, the Metropolitan Life Insurance Co. said Friday. This is an increase of 5,000 from 1965. The major reason for the increase was the continuing rise in motor vehicle fatalities. The traffic toll was 53,000, an increase of 4,000 over 1965, the insurance company said.

Bate Rites On Monday

Funeral services for a long-time Saanich resident, Frederick Churchill Bate, 79, will be held at 1 p.m. Monday in Sands Mortuary.

Mr. Bate, who died Friday, had been a resident of Victoria and Saanich for 74 years, and was well-known to farmers in the area for his operation, in partnership with his father Thomas and his brothers, of one of the area's few hay-baling machines.

From 1910 to 1935, the Thomas family operated the baler in the area from Gordon Head to Deep Cove.

For several years, Mr. Bate cut poles for the B.C. Electric Company, in addition to his activities as a fruit farmer in Central Saanich.

Survivors are four brothers, Harold, Steve, John and Walter; two sisters, Mrs. Lydia Perkins and Mrs. Annie Atkinson; several nieces and nephews, all in Victoria.

Mobiles Cause Anxiety

OTTAWA (CP) — Some members of the defence staff are reported worried that Mobile Command may become an army within an army and, in effect, take over the whole defence show.

Informants say the situation is somewhat analagous to that in the Second World War when army headquarters here fought its control over the army overseas getting weaker and weaker.

LAST YEAR

The 29,000-man Mobile Command, with headquaters at St. Hubert, Que., was established last year. It comprises three infantry brigades in Canada and will later include four squadrons of CF-5 jet attack planes as well as Buffalo transport aircraft and heavy and light helicopters. It has administrative control over the infantry brigade in Europe.

CONTROL PLAN

Informants said Mobile Command plans to take control — if it can — of Maritime Command's fleet replenishment vessel, the Provider, as a troopship, and two similar ships for which contracts were recently let.

Maritime Command, primarily naval, is said to be disturbed about this projected move.

RCAF UNHAPPY

At the same time, the RCAF component of Maritime Command — four squadrons of patrol planes — is reported unhappy about being swallowed by the navy.

And many airmen are said to fear that Mobile Command will try to get its hands on Air Transport Command.

This would leave the air force with only the air division in Europe and Air Defence Command. Both these roles are withering away.

William Reith

Scouting Expert Dies Here at 47

A 47-year-old Victoria man died Friday — three weeks before he was to have been presented with a 20-year award for long service to Victoria Scouting.

The award, to William D. Reith, 6882 Wallace, was to have been made at the annual Scouts dinner Feb. 2.

HEART ATTACK

Mr. Reith, who died of a heart attack at his home, had been a member of the Greater Victoria Regional Scout Council since 1964.

His love for Scouting began at Quamichan in 1937.

It grew through the stages of Cubs, Scouts, commissioner and public relations officer toward the goal of making Scouting synonymous with camping, hiking and the outdoor life.

PARKS OFFICIAL

Mr. Reith was an information officer with the provincial parks department.

He is survived by his wife, Jeanie, who is on the provincial council of the Girl Guides, a son, Rowallan and a daughter, Joanne.

Canadian Closed Championship Delayed

Centennial Change Spices Chess Scene

By RAY KERR

There will be some interesting changes on the national and provincial chess scene in the coming year, it was learned here Friday.

Biggest surprise is that there will be no Canadian Closed championship this year, according to Colin Aykroyd, B.C. Chess Federation tournament director, of Vancouver.

Instead of the closed championship, there will be a centennial open tournament in Montreal, July 7 to 17.

Anyone interested should get in touch with Russell Croft, P.O. Box 964, Montreal 3, Que.

Mr. Aykroyd said it is expected the tournament will be a strong one with a number of foreign masters invited.

However, the event is open to all Canadian players, and further details can be obtained from Mr. Croft.

The lack of a closed championship puts a different light on the B.C. Closed, scheduled for North Vancouver this year.

Had there been a national closed tournament as scheduled, the first-place finisher in the B.C. meet would have been the province's representative.

As it stands, anyone can go to the national open, and the national closed likely will be held in 1968.

Even so, the provincial championship—March 24, 25 and 26 at the North Vancouver Community Centre — is expected to attract a number of prominent Victoria players.

Almost sure of going are former city champions Ollie Sarakannas and Alan Lane, with several others joining them on the trip.

While Victoria could come up with its share of honors here, an even better opportunity for the city is available in connection with B.C. Open.

This prestigious event either will be held during the May 24 holiday weekend in May or early in June.

According to Mr. Aykroyd, the provincial chess body would be delighted to have the tournament held in the provincial capital.

"If Victoria would like to bid on holding the event, I would be glad to direct the event and co-operate with your Victoria Chess Club as we did with Nanaimo in last year's successful event," he said.

The rest would be up to local chess officials, he indicated.

Mr. Aykroyd also said there are three other important tournaments players from Vancouver Island and Victoria would be interested in.

One is the giant U.S. Open, which this year will be played in Atlantic City Aug. 15 to 30. Canadian players are eligible to compete.

The other two tournaments are both made to order for Pacific Northwest players.

The Puget Sound Open will be held in Seattle March 18 and 19, while the Seattle Open will be played at the same location July 8 and 9.

Mr. Aykroyd also said the Vancouver City Chess Club would be glad to play a match against a Victoria side.

The Vancouverites, he said have two of the best chess players in Canada in Duncan Suttles and Elod Macskasy. Also on the team are Stan Pedlar, former Manitoba champion, and Tim Anderson, a strong upcoming player.

Mr. Aykroyd said that, if Victoria could suggest a definite date, "I'm sure we would be able to accommodate you on a Sunday."

Victoria players are not standing still at the moment, and their first big test will be an inter-city speed match against Nanaimo.

The clash will take place a week from this Sunday in the Hub City, with each side represented by seven men.

Immediately following this event, top players from Victoria and Nanaimo will begin a tournament which is expected to prepare them for the big chess wars ahead.

The tournament, likely to be comprised of 12 players, will be held every Sunday at the city chess club.

Conservationists Hail Varsity Researchers

A group of University of Victoria staff and students who plan to take an active part in advising on the management and use of B.C. natural resources is winning wide acclaim from conservation groups.

"One of the biggest assets of a group like this would be its geographic location at the seat of the legislature," says Howard Paish, managing director of the B.C. Wildlife Federation, biggest conservation group in British Columbia.

Could Help

He said the research facilities and the university library could be a big help to conservation groups.

If the university group considered research as one of its main functions, it could help layman conservation groups come up with facts, he said.

"Most of us were on to the Buttle Lake problems three years ago. A group like this could have given us a lot of information about the pollution dangers.

"When we have ideas we could ask them for facts and comments," he said.

Two Months

The Uvic group of more than 30 teachers and professors and students, mainly from biology and zoology schools, has been actively kicking around the idea of a B.C. Resources group since November.

It has enlisted the support and advice of about 30 other interested persons including representatives from Amalgamated Conservation Society, Victoria Fish and Game Club, Thetis Park Sanctuary Association, resource planners, Victoria Outdoor Club, and individuals concerned about the use of B.C.'s natural resources.

Fog Ended

Up until last week the group seemed to be in a constitutional fog groping in the dark for a direction to take.

Marc A. M. Bell, one of the instigators of the group, says the discussions were initiated "in response to what many feel has been long needed — an unrushed objective look at the resource management picture in B.C."

This step, he said, was taken in view of the continuous recurrence of what appears to be examples of poor resource policy and practice and the apparent confusion on the part of all parties concerned with these problems — government, business, advisory authorities as well as the layman.

Clear Air

It has been suggested that the university group might eventually engage in one of a number of the following: act as a watchdog on management policy and practice, engage in a program of resource research and public education, clear the air with facts on confused issues, provide professional advice to management authorities if desired, ask pointed questions of the appropriate authorities at the right time, support existing conservation groups in their efforts to improve specific resource managment schemes, or attempt to unify existing public conservation efforts.

Monday's meeting with invited interested parties seemed to lean toward advising research as the most useful function of the university group.

This writer would be all behind such a group.

In fact already much university research is going to waste because of lack of coordination.

Better Brief

One of the most telling briefs about potential mine tailing pollution in Buttle Lake was presented to the special legislative committee by three Uvic students, who are continuing their research into the matter.

They are among the sparkplugs of the proposed new B.C. resources group and their studies could be made available to other interested organizations.

One group of university students has been making a study of the Goldstream and its fish potential. Both Victoria Fish and Game Club and the Amalgamated Conservation Society have been pressing federal fisheries for a rehabilitation project on the Goldstream. The conservation group and the university group have never got together. But they would under the proposed new organization.

Another university group has made studies of waterfowl and other ecological factors at Witty's Lagoon. The group's findings haven't been made available to those who plan the future development of Witty's Lagoon, nor to those who argue for and against continuance of waterfowl shooting at the lagoon site. They would be under the proposed resource group and it could be shown by facts whether or not shooters are endangering rare waterfowl, as opponents have claimed.

Another university group is studying algae problems in lakes. That information would be welcomed by fish and wildlife clubs and other recreational groups faced with algae problems.

Call Meeting

The young and eager university students could be invaluable to conservation groups by keeping a lookout for published conservation information and acting as a clearing house for passing along such literature to other interested groups.

Another function of the university group could be to keep a careful watch on legislative sessions for debates and bills concerning natural resources. At the end of the session it could call a meeting of all other conservation groups and pass along its report.

This Uvic group is still groping for its future, but it seems to be on its way. It plans to hold weekly meetings and to soon come up with a specific course of action.

We welcome it as something that could become one of the best things to hit the B.C. natural resource picture in many years.

Indian Trust

Award Bids Coming

Applications are coming in for the $300 annual Mungo Martin Memorial Trust scholarship from members of Indian bands throughout the province, Gerald S. Andrews, chairman of the trustee board, reported Friday.

The scholarship, which can be divided among several applicants, awarded to one person, or held over to the following year, depending on what the board decides, covers education, vocational guidance and the opportunity to further art and craft skills.

The scholarship was set up last month after B.C. Indian Arts and Welfare Society of Victoria raised $6,000 by public subscription.

Chief Martin, famous for his carving ability and efforts to reactivate interest among whites and Indians of Indian folklore, died in Victoria on Aug. 16, 1962, aged 83.

$759,500 Low Bid In Burnaby

Tenders for site preparation and construction of three residential buildings for 63 patients at the Burnaby Mental Health Centre were opened Friday by deputy works minister Arnold Webb.

Lowest of nine bidders on the early stages of the project was $759,500 submitted by Doyle Construction Company Ltd. of Vancouver.

The highest bid of $866,068 was submitted by Bennett and White Ltd. of Vancouver. No Victoria firms bid on the project.

'War' Denied

TORONTO (CP) — The Quebec-based Confederation of National Trade Unions plans to open a regional office in Toronto next week. But president Marcel Pepin has denied any "declaration of war" against Canadian Labor Congress unions in Ontario.

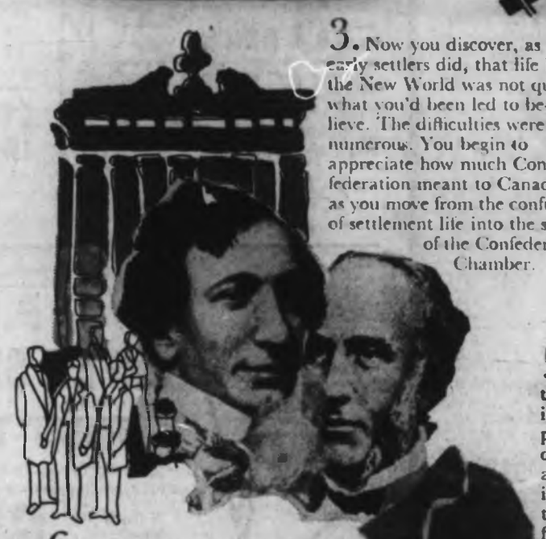
The Confederation Train is here tomorrow

The most exciting and unique train you have have ever seen. Everyone in town will be coming. Make sure you don't miss the train that brings Canada to you!

1. In the first exhibit car, you go right back to the creation of the Continent—walk through a primeval forest and hear the sounds of life that existed millions of years ago. Then you see how the ice age came crunching down, changing and shaping our country. This is how Canada was formed—and you'll see it happening!

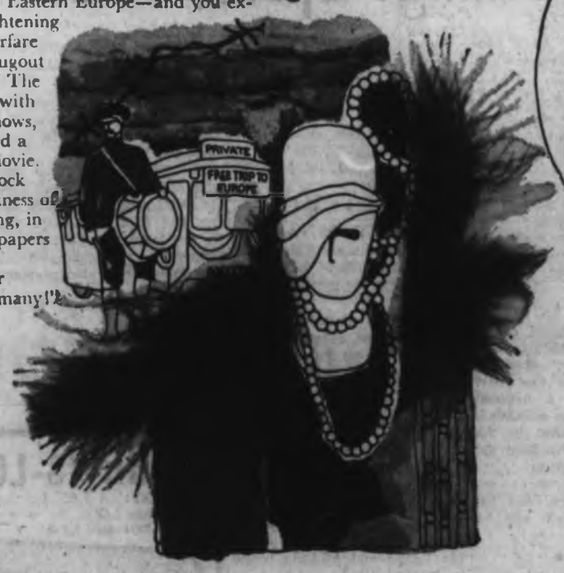
2. Have you ever wondered how it must have been to be an early explorer of Canada? These men were real adventurers! Here, you realize, perhaps for the first time, the tremendous magnitude of their explorations. Then came the settlers, and you share their discomfort and dreams as they cross the ocean in the hold of an immigrant ship.

3. Now you discover, as the early settlers did, that life in the New World was not quite what you'd been led to believe. The difficulties were numerous. You begin to appreciate how much Confederation meant to Canadians as you move from the confusion of settlement life into the stillness of the Confederation Chamber.



4. 1867 to 1876—a time of temperamental outbursts, changing ideas and enormous progress. You share the excitement as Canada becomes a continent bordered by three oceans . . . live through the Riel Rebellion . . . the completion of the rail line to the Pacific . . . the Klondike rush . . . the often stormy elections of the five Prime Ministers of those times, Canada was growing up.

5. The coming of the twentieth century—the Boer War—a flood of immigrants from Eastern Europe—and you experience the frightening din of trench warfare as seen from a dugout in World War I. The twenties roar in with flappers, peep shows, player pianos and a Mack Sennett movie. Suddenly, the stock crash—the bleakness of the thirties ending, in 1939, with newspapers proclaiming "Canada at War with Germany!"



6. The second World War—Canada begins producing warplanes, tanks and ships while her heroes fight and die abroad. Prime Minister Mackenzie King announces the war's end. Now Canadians turn anew to science, politics, medicine, industry, the arts and international affairs. Our achievements in these fields give every indication that our greatest era is about to begin...

Garden Notes

False Economy

By M. V. CHESNUT

LEFTOVER SEEDS — (A. J., Victoria). The viability of the seeds you have left over from last spring's sowings can be tested quite easily. Simply space out a given number of seeds on a piece of blotting paper kept moist in a saucer and check the percentage of seeds that sprout. I should warn you a germination test doesn't tell the whole story, for it is possible for aged seeds to germinate quite readily, yet fail to make satisfactory growth thereafter. I have noticed this particularly with tomato, marigold and lettuce seeds; the overage seeds came up, but the plants lacked vigor.

Frankly, I think it is penny wise and pound foolish to sow leftovers just to save the 15-cent cost of a fresh packet of seeds.

BURNTOVER LAND — (H. L. G., Duncan). The reason why a burntover meadow grows so lush and so green is because the stubble and dead grass is turned into ash, rich in plant nutrients and readily available to the roots. The burning doesn't add anything to the sum total of nutrients, though; it merely makes them available immediately. If allowed to rot down naturally, they would contribute the same or more plant food, but more slowly and over a longer period of time.

The plant nutrients in ash are highly soluble and leach out of the soil quickly, so the dramatic green-up that follows burning is not very long-lasting.

GREENHOUSE LOCATION — (F.W., Metchosin). It is most important that you find a well-drained site for your new greenhouse, for when the structure is erected over soggy, sodden ground, it becomes extremely difficult to keep the air humidity down to a reasonable level. Condensation on the glass is heavy, and the consequent drip to the plants is very bad for them.

Wind is also a factor, and your heating bill will be a lot less if you can find a site in the lea of a windbreak of some kind to break up the force of prevailing winter gales.

While oldtime practice was to site a greenhouse with its length running north and south to get equal sun on both sides, modern practice is to run it east and west.

You see, in summer when the sun is high, you have more light and more warmth in the greenhouse than you can use, and it becomes necessary to whitewash or otherwise shade the glass to reduce temperature and avoid scorching the plants. In winter, when warmth and light are most needed, the sun, low to the south, will strike more area of glass in an east-west greenhouse, and the temperature within will be several degrees higher.

RED RHODODENDRON — (F.S., Cadboro Bay). There are at least 50 bright red rhododendrons listed in various nursery catalogues and I wouldn't want to go out on a limb and name any one of them as "the best," as this is so much a matter of personal preference. Besides, I have had personal experience with only three or four red varieties.

A few red ones which have been given high ratings by rhododendron specialists are Unknown Warrior, Rubina, Laura Abercorway, King George and Firebird, all costing from $5 to $10 depending on size and age. One of ours, a great favorite with my wife, is an oldish variety called Britannia, with glowing red blossoms shaped like the flowers of a gloxinia. In spite of its very British name, it is actually of German origin and was developed in the gardens of the Royal Porcelain Factory in Berlin under the patronage of Kaiser Wilhelm.

FLETCHER'S CYPRESS — (T.E.McI., Victoria). Cupressus fletcheri responds well to pruning in late April, when strong new growth is commencing. Never shear it over with the hedging shears, though, but cut back individual tips with a knife or secateurs, shaping the plant to your taste.

Annual clipping of the top will cause this cypress to fatten out and grow wider, while the tipping of the side growth will make it taller and slimmer.

Junk Mailers Upset ART BUCHWALD

My Daughter Bought, Sold

WASHINGTON — The United States Post Office, from all reports, is going broke and I think I know the reason why. There is so much junk mail being sent out these days that the post office can't handle it, and the taxpayer who doesn't want the junk mail in the first place, may have to pay more for his postage to make up the deficit.

I'm a reasonable man and I don't mind what the junk mail people do to me, but when they start flooding my kids with the stuff, I get slightly upset.

There was a time when I came home at night and after going through the mail I would say to my 18-year-old daughter, "Jennifer, there's a letter here for you."

But now when I come home at night it is Jennifer who says to me, "There's a letter here for you somewhere." And she keeps the rest.

If memory serves me right, it all started about three years ago when Jennifer sent away for a free sample of Yak complexion butter advertised in a comic book. For only 25 cents (to handle the cost of mailing) Jennifer received a nickel's worth of Yak butter and a catalogue advertising everything from soy bean bracelets to oyster shell roller skate keys.

Unbeknownst to me the Yak complexion butter people sold Jennifer's name and address to the Teen-age War Surplus Company, who sent Jennifer a letter offering her a set of Kamikaze knives made from Second World War Japanese bayonets.

Although Jennifer did not reply to this offer, it mattered little to the Teen-age War Surplus Company. They made their profit by selling her name and address to the Marquis de Sade Children's Book Club.

Pretty soon Jennifer was being flooded with offers of free illustrated books in color of the Marquis de Sade's works, if she would buy the complete Lapland Encyclopedia for $180, payable at 25 cents a week.

After a terrible fight in which Jennifer accused me of retarding her education, we tore up the offers which mattered not a bit to the Marquis de Sade Children's Book Club, because they sold Jennifer's name and address to the Bach, Blues, and Beatle Record Club.

Without my knowledge Jennifer became a B. B. and B. Club member and pretty soon she was getting bills for records that she couldn't pay for. I tried to cancel her club membership, but was warned if I tried, the company would take our house away ("see fine print, chapter three, paragraph four").

I guess I wouldn't have minded so much if the B. B. and B. hadn't passed on Jennifer's name and address to the Cereal of the Month Club which offered to send Jennifer a different cereal each month with a prize inside. Since there was a self-addressed envelope with the offer, Jennifer naturally joined without my consent.

The Cereal of the Month Club then sold Jennifer's name and address to the Frankenstein Mutual Fund, set up especially for children.

From here on out I lost track of how many companies were corresponding with Jennifer. I do know it's gotten out of hand though, because just the other day Jennifer said she was thinking of hiring a secretary to help answer her mail.

The Rocky Little World of SHEILAH GRAHAM

The End's in the Stars

HOLLYWOOD (NANA) — With the astrologers working overtime at this time of the year, I can tell you that the top star gazer in France has predicted that the marriage of Brigitte Bardot and Gunther Sachs will come to an end during 1967. 'Tis hard to dismiss him with a shrug or a grimace because it was the same gentleman who predicted that Brig would wed in 1966, impulsively, to a man she barely knew. The one prediction came to pass. Will the other? . . . Brigitte's dentist advised her not to have her teeth pushed back a bit as per her request. "It will ruin your pout," he warned . . . Speaking of teeth, which we do all the time, Loretta Young has been seen in a toothsome pair of braces like your children wear in their teens. Loretta is not a teenager but a girl is never too old, it would seem, for this type of torture. Speaking of Loretta, I saw her two sons, Christopher and Peter, dashing into the heavenly smelling bakery of the Ranch House Restaurant at Ojai stuffing their knapsacks with the heavenly bread baked on the premises. Over a slice of fresh lime cheese cake, Peter was bemoaning the fact that his rock 'n' roll combo had run into some difficulty in Sausalito where so many drug-taking juveniles came to hear them play that the joint had been closed by the authorities.

Marlon Brando may be a pain to Elizabeth Taylor in Reflections in a Golden Eye, but at night when he is with his chums at the home he has rented in Rome, a new Marlon is born, a Marlon who plays with his four-year-old son, Tehotu, and plays host to the boy's mother, the exotic Tarita, his playmate in Mutiny on the Bounty. The boy, a handsome little fellar, looks more like his mother than pappy.

Lex Barker, rich from all he is paid for his pictures in Europe, played host to 20 friends and relatives at the fancy and expensive resort of St. Moritz over the holidays. Lex, a former ski instructor, is still a whiz at whizzing down the slopes . . . Mrs. Frank Gershin is proudly wearing her husband's Christmas gift, a full-length mink coat. Believe it or not, furs are useful in Southern California where it can be freezing at night.

Insults Compounded

SYDNEY HARRIS

A colleague of mine remarked the other day that people don't seem to know what they are saying — they know the words they are using, but they don't hear the music, as it were.

"Here's what I mean," he said. "I'll get a letter from a reader that's as insulting and scurrilous as you could imagine — so nasty that I won't even dignify it with an answer. Then, a few days later I'll get a follow-up letter from the same person, indignantly wanting to know why I didn't give him 'the courtesy of a reply.'"

This has been my own experience, too. The people who write the ugliest letters are the ones who are mostly quickly insulted when I don't favor them with "the courtesy of a reply." As far as they're concerned, courtesy is a one-way street.

It's possible that some people don't hear themselves. I was in a shop recently, when a lady and her teen-age daughter asked to look at some merchandise. The clerk was snippy about showing it, and the lady gently rebuked her in the most polite terms, as she walked off with her daughter.

The clerk called to a friend at the other end of the counter, "Did you hear how she talked to me? Some nerve, huh?"

If I didn't make it a point never to interfere in an altercation between women, I would have leaned over and said, "You were the one who was rude, my little friend, but you're so ill-bred you don't even know it. The customer was much more of a lady toward you than I would have been a gentlemen!"

We all know that we can't really hear the way our voices sound physically — just listen to your voice played back on a tape-recorder and it will shock you to incredulity. What we don't know is that often we can't hear the emotional tone of our voices, either, and that we demand more courtesy and consideration in the tone of others than we ourselves give to them.

This is especially true vis-a-vis parents and children. What the child listens for is the tone of the voice, not so much the words. And if he "hears" boredom, irritation, impatience, hostility, or carefully controlled hysteria, he will respond to the emotional affect, not to the words themselves. Children, in this sense, remain pre-verbal for a long time; and all of us remain pre-verbal forever, in some way.

Why should we expect a courteous reply to an insulting letter? Or a charming response from a customer we have treated with unwitting rudeness? If we learned to "hear" ourselves more acutely, we would hear sweet tones from others more frequently.

Technicians Sweat to Get Exhibits Operating

Train 'Electronic Nightmare'

Canada's Confederation train lay under heavy police guard in a steady downpour Saturday night, with technicians working feverishly inside to get the exhibits operating again in time for their unveiling today.

A federal centennial official, describing the train's contents as an "electronic nightmare," insisted that it had not been actually damaged by the rail trip across the CNR's transcontinental line.

However, he said, the journey had "shaken up" the exhibits, and experts would be struggling to get them back in shape by this afternoon.

"They wouldn't let the Queen of England into the train tonight," said Paul Taylor, a publicity man for the train.

Even deputy provincial secretary L. J. Wallace, chairman of B.C.'s centennial committee, was left standing forlornly on the platform Saturday.

"Nobody has invited me in yet, so I just hope it's good," he said. "The exterior is quite pleasing."

Inside, for those who managed a peek by hook or crook, was a six-car lineup of displays reminiscent of a wax museum depicting the Confederation chamber, a print shop, numerous war scenes, a coal mine gallery and old and modern machines, among others.

Suitable sound effects will accompany all, when the technicians get them back in service.

First Chance

The general public will not have its first chance until Tuesday to see whether the displays are worth the price.

Today will be a special showing for 55 news and broadcasting people brought here by the federal centennial authorities.

Monday, the train will be opened to senior citizens, members of the Red Chevron Association, and other veterans and their wives.

Few Takers?

Some pensioners looked at the train's arrangements and suggested there might be few takers. There is no shelter from the rain for those who have to wait outside, and no place to sit.

"Centennial officials have just not thought this thing out," said Peter Davey, president of Aged Pensioners No. 3. "This is no time of the year for us old people to be standing out in the rain waiting.

'All That Money'

"This train cost all that money, but they never thought of us," he said.

A B.C. Hydro spokesman said Saturday that no special buses or extra service had been requested for the Victoria West route which serves the Point Ellice area, and none was planned.

There is no off-street parking space in the area, and a special one-hour limit has been imposed on nearby streets.

Full Charge

A senior official of the department of education said local schools would be taking full responsibility when they took pupils through the train. A previous regulation requiring written parental consent has been discontinued.

"It's highly educational for the impressionable years of Grades 5, 6 and 7," said Mrs. Frank Whittaker of the Greater Victoria Parent-Teacher Council.

Biggest Stunt

"It's the biggest publicity stunt Canada has ever seen," said Clyde Batten, head publicity man for the train.

He said there was no special significance to the train starting its cross-country jaunt in Victoria.

"What's wrong with Halifax?" he said. "It happens to be starting in Victoria."

About a Third

Preliminary calculations indicate that about one-third of Victoria's population could be marshed through the train under high-efficiency conditions in the 110 hours it will be open here.

Mr. Batten said he considered that a good number.

"Let's see — the population of Victoria is 55,000 to 60,000," he said. Later he quoted the Greater Victoria figure of about three times that.

—William Boucher

Wait till Tuesday, Constable William Korte tells Mrs. Douglas Zwack.

Christmas a la Julian

Many of Greater Victoria's Ukrainians and friends celebrated Christmas, according to Julian calendar, at buffet dinner and dance in Petty Officers' Mess at Naden Saturday. About 330 ate traditional dishes, did folk dances. Shown with plates of cabbage rolls, herring, garlic ring and other delicacies are, from left, Mrs. Bohdan Kostiuk, 2832 Colquitz; Mrs. Helen Macauley, 3420 Bethune; Mrs. William Mishaulk, 3806 Rose, and Mrs. Roy Alexander, 1442 Wende.—(William Boucher)

'Main Pollution Problem'

Air Standard Urged

Coun. Edith Gunning, chairman of Saanich's health and welfare committee, said Saturday night provincial standards setting the levels of contamination would be the first step toward easing local air pollution.

"We need those standards desperately," she added.

Saanich council last week received a petition protesting alleged air pollution by Victoria Plywood Ltd.

'CO-OPERATIVE'

Coun. Gunning said the firm had been "most co-operative" in trying to reduce smoke and flyash.

"The lack of provincial standards is the main problem in air pollution control," she added. "Air pollution has no respect for political boundaries."

HAS HOPES

Coun. Gunning noted that an inter-departmental committee of the provincial government had been looking into the possibility of setting standards "and I'm expecting something specific from them."

She hoped provincial authorities would not only set limits for airborne pollutants but also specify the limits at which manufacturing equipment could emit smoke and flyash.

Death Verdict: Accidental

Coroner Edmond Jorre de St. Jorre reported after a coroner's inquiry into the death of 16-month-old William Hardy in an Esquimalt house fire New Year's Day that the death was accidental.

The baby died in St. Joseph's Hospital 12 hours after being taken from the burning home of his grandparents at 822 Esquimalt Road.

Socreds Elect Saanich Slate

The Saanich and Islands Social Credit association has elected P. A. Philipchalk of Sidney president for two years.

He succeeds Carl Herman, elected first vice-president. Other vice-presidents are, in order, L. L. King, Joseph MacRoberts, C. W. Smalley, Al House and Joe Money.

Mad Little Allegories Spawn an Institution

By BILL STAVDAL

Sharing a romantic theory with his readers has made Toronto columnist Richard Needham a minor Canadian institution in less than three years.

As expressed Saturday, the theory goes: "If it's interesting and exciting, it has already happened in some city 500 years ago."

Conversely stated: "Romeo and Juliet, Samson and Delilah are right here in Victoria!"

That's what he said.

Mallegories'

To understand and believe, one ought properly to have been reading Mr. Needham's mad little allegories in the Globe and Mail since he started producing them in February, 1964, on "a purely experimental basis."

Or one could acquire a copy of Needham's Inferno, a collection of his columns published last summer and reprinted already. Mr. Needham autographed armloads of them in Victoria Saturday.

He writes about everything, but returns frequently to what he terms man's inhumanity to women. He is an Ayn Rand-type individualist who detests government.

Half and Half

Because of this, half his mail is from people under 30.

"Practically all the other 50 per cent comes from women."

Why?

"They have the time to read the paper and write letters. And I write about human relationships, which is what women are interested in.

"I'm intensely interested in human beings, and I'm endlessly involved with them," he said. "I'm continually mixing with good people and listening to them."

His paramount enthusiasm is women—"They're wonderful."

Sweet Hate

He hates:

● Lump sugar — "I'm convinced they put a chemical on it that makes it insoluble in hot fluid."

● Telephones — "I regard the telephone as an invasion of privacy, as non-communication."

—Wm. E. John

Needham and Inferno

He's not keen about cars either. He doesn't own one and goes so far as to say he prefers public transportation.

Many of his columns begin: "Once upon a time there was . . ." And his heroines are generally hapless maids by the name of Polly Andry, Sal Volatile, Gloria Monday or Pearl Diver.

This and That

A career journalist, Mr. Needham was unknown outside newsrooms before he flowered with his own column. Though he now has a cosmopolitan readership of more or less sophisticated taste he retains the stereotype image of a seedy old sub-editor.

He is proud of the fact he lives in a bare suite in a Chinese rooming house on the fringe of Toronto's slums. He claims to possess only an alarm clock and the clothes on his back, and to want no more.

"Possessions tend to drag you down."

He travels constantly nowadays, which gives him an opportunity to fill speaking engagements before student groups.

Stout Hearts

"I tell them to take chances, not to be afraid, to be their own sweet selves. You can do it if you have the courage.

"So many of us spend life trying to please other people."

Meantime he takes notes in his mental clipping file, evolving the columns which, he says, sometimes take months before they are ready.

He may have picked up the seed of one en route to Victoria.

"Maybe I'll do Noah and his ark in the Vancouver setting. You know — the whole earth covered with water."

Road Work Starts At Sidney

Work has started on a $120,000 road improvement program for Resthaven Drive, Sidney.

The road is to be widened, and curb and sidewalks will be put in from Beacon Avenue to MacDonald Park Road, on the arterial road.

The first third of the road is under construction at the moment, and it is expected that it will take two or three years to complete the program.

The road serves North Saanich high school, and it is felt that improvement will add to children's safety.

Space Talk Resumes Lectures

A talk on the exploration of space resumes the University of Victoria extension lectures Monday in a new location.

Dr. Richard Bollard, chairman of the department of Aeronautics and Astronautics at the University of Washington, will speak at 8:15 p.m. in Room 144 of the new Education Arts Building.

The building is reached by driving nearly all around the new one-way ring road on the Gordon Head campus, then swinging left into the parking lot.

Oak Bay Active Again

The Oak Bay Recreation Commission's winter activities will resume Monday. The details:

Monday, table tennis, 7.30 p.m., Willows school; badminton, 8, Oak Bay junior high. Tuesday, bridge, 7.45, Monterey school; volleyball, 8, Oak Bay high; music appreciation, 7.30, School of Music. Wednesday, girls' hockey, 8.30 a.m., Oak Bay junior high. Thursday, badminton, 8 p.m., Oak Bay junior. Friday, senior citizens, 1 p.m., municipal hall.

THE DAILY BRITISH COLONIST

January 8, 1867

Peru was still only talking of war.

Elsewhere in South America, war had already come, and a fellow called Mosquera continued his campaigns against the established church on the Isthmus of Darien.

In London, The Times complained bitterly in an editorial of the U.S. toleration of the Fenians. However, Britain was having other troubles of her own, and arrests of Irishmen were being made in large numbers.

In Nanaimo, a chap called Holder was "apparently greatly distressed at the position in which he finds himself."

He was being held on a $1,000 surety for shooting another man named Harrup. He claimed "temporary insanity from excessive drinking." Harrup, we are given to understand, was not too badly injured.

In Victoria, a meeting at the theatre was termed "one of the largest and most respectable gatherings ever held here."

Remarks of the speakers "were generally well-timed and temperate."

The subject?

Whether or not Victoria should become the capital city of the province.

Freight Increase

Farms See Huge Boost In Food Bill

By JOHN MATTERS

Freight rate increases proposed by truckers between the Lower Mainland and Vancouver Island will force up Victoria's food prices about 12 per cent.

The forecast was made Saturday night by Coun. Ed Lum of Saanich, member of a special committee of the South Saanich Farmers' Institute which is investigating rate increases proposed by 15 trucking companies.

The institute is preparing a brief that will be taken to a Public Utilities Commission hearing in Victoria Jan. 23.

SELECTIVE

Gil Rumley, chairman of the committee, said a study shows the rate proposals are selective and, for example, would not apply to meat, petroleum products, paint or pulp and paper.

However, the rates on foodstuffs would escalate between 10 and 13½ per cent and on fresh fruit and vegetables about 12½ per cent.

NOT SELECTIVE

"Our contention is that the rate increases shouldn't be so selective," said Mr. Rumley. "They will hit the consumer directly."

He suggested that if a rate hike is necessary, perhaps it could be 2 or 3 per cent on all commodities.

Coun. Lum said if the PUC authorized the freight rate increase, he expected food costs would rise "automatically."

'PASS IT ON'

"There would be no alternative but to pass it on to the consumers."

Mr. Rumley said his committee also is trying to arrange a meeting with Premier Bennett to protest the prohibition of drop-trailer traffic on B.C. Ferries.

He said if B.C. Ferries adopts that policy, the heavy trailers will have to use the Canadian Pacific Railway's barges between the Lower Mainland and Vancouver Island, which charge higher rates.

Police Offer Lost Items

Month of Anxiety Ends

After a month of loneliness and anxiety, Steven Barkanyi of Sooke is being re-united with his family.

His wife and four children were seriously injured in a car accident Dec. 3, on their way home from a Christmas shopping trip in Victoria.

Mrs. Barkanyi and their youngest son, Thomas, 4½, were discharged from hospital a week ago, in time to spend New Year's Day at home.

The five members of the Barkanyi family were among seven injured in the crash on Sooke Road. Two brothers were in the second car.

Three of the Barkanyis remain in hospital — Gabrialla, 16, who suffered serious head injuries and a broken hip; Steven, 15, with a broken leg, and George, 14, with both legs broken.

Mrs. Barkanyi, who also broke a leg, will be in a cast for several months and the youngest boy, Thomas, had a bad cut on the head.

It was a Christmas that is unlikely to be forgotten, Mr. Barkanyi said Friday.

"Nobody was home, but I must be thankful they've lived through it."

As an illustration of the seriousness of the wounds, close to a dozen doctors attended the injured when they were brought to St. Joseph's Hospital that Saturday afternoon.

Mr. Barkanyi, a mill mechanic, now expects all of the family to recover without difficulties. Gabrialla, in Gorge Road Hospital, may have to go back for plastic surgery.

Alderman's Daughter

Elizabeth Edgelow Married In Christ Church Cathedral

Christ Church Cathedral was the setting for one of the first weddings of the new year, Friday evening, when Elizabeth Jeane Edgelow became the bride of Lyle Richard Flury.

Parents of the principals are Alderman and Mrs. Geoffrey I. Edgelow of "Lynwood," 50 Highlands Road; Mrs. L. V. Flury, 2580 Arbutus Road, and the late Mr. Flury.

The fair-haired bride was radiant as she entered the cathedral on the arm of her father. Delicate appliques of lace edged the bodice and lily point sleeves of her exquisite gown of white peau de soie. The skirt was gently en train. A lace border and appliques accented her floor-length veil of nylon net which misted from a coronet of pearls. The bride's only jewelry was an heirloom pearl pendant. White satin ribbons trimmed her cascade bouquet of white gladioli.

Bishop Michael Coleman officiated and organist was Richard Proudman. The pews were marked with nosegays of white gladioli and toning ribbon.

Peau d'elegance in turquoise shade formed the short-length gowns worn by matron of honor, Mrs. Tony McCullough, and bridesmaid, Miss Carolynn Gudewill. The gowns were fashioned on empire lines with trains extending from the shoulder to hemline. Their headpieces were toning bows, edged with net. As complement, they carried bouquets of pale pink feathered carnations and sweetheart roses.

Ian Chard was best man and ushering guests was Logan Mathison.

Reginald Elliott proposed the toast to the bride's happiness at the reception which followed in the Union Club. All-white floral arrangements enhanced the head table which was centred with a three-tier wedding cake.

Many out-of-town guests attended the ceremony and reception. They included Sub.-Lt. L. M. Kirby and Mrs. Kirby of Halifax, N.S.; Mr. and Mrs. Jack Omand, Mrs. Mary Mackenzie, Mrs. Mame Hunter, Mrs. Evelyn Smith, Mrs. Jaqueline West, Mr. and Mrs. W. Shippam, Mr. and Mrs. Art Roberts and Mrs. G. Carter, all of Vancouver; Mr. and Mrs. David Reid of Duncan, Mrs. Hugh Vicars, Kamloops, and the bride's cousin, Michael Paterson, Seattle.

As her going-away ensemble, the new Mrs. Flury chose a three-piece suit in tones of russet brown and black, matching hat and brown accessories. Her corsage was a white gardenia.

After a honeymoon in Vancouver, the newlyweds will make their home at 1116 Fairfield Road.

A reception in the Union Club followed the wedding of Mr. and Mrs. Richard Flury. — (Robin Clarke)

Girl Heads Student Council At Carleton University

By MARILYN ARGUE

OTTAWA (CP) — Carleton University's student council has a woman for its president, but she's not an ardent campaigner for female rights in politics.

Jackie Larkin, a brown-haired honors student in political science, says her election was "a fluke."

She was originally elected to the student relations post, to deal with overseas students and community relations. But at the resignation of the president last fall, she was elected to the top position, virtually by acclamation.

Her only opposition was a boy who ran against her because he didn't believe in uncontested elections.

"But it didn't really work out because he agreed with me on all the issues and told people not to vote for him."

The daughter of an army officer, 21-year-old Jackie went to school in Kingston, Ont., Victoria, Deep River, Ont., and London, England. A scholarship student, she plans post-graduate studies in England or the United States after a year spent travelling.

Her election put girls at the head of both of Ottawa's university governments. Monique Ouellette, 21, of Montreal, was elected president of the student council at the University of Ottawa last spring.

Jackie says the job demands "dedication 24 hours a day" with constant discussions with students and paperwork for meetings.

"Committee-itis is the curse of student government."

Though she's not aiming for a career in federal politics, she says her presidential experience has made her want a future job that's "demanding as well as interesting."

The part she likes least about the presidency is the lobbying. "I always just hope they'll see reasons and that's not necessarily the way politics works."

She says students are important people in the modern world and should be making their opinions heard.

"I'm not in favor of revolt on the campus but I think there should be ferment, a good dialogue between students and the community.

"The whole economic basis of today's society is the trained, skilled individuals the university will produce. The students should be really examining the roots of society and deciding whether they like them or not."

Mr. and Mrs. John Charles Lowrence, 90, Luline Avenue, announce the engagement of their second eldest daughter, Marilyn Joan, to Mr. Robert George Carter, only son of Mr. and Mrs. George Millard Carter, 643 Canterbury Road. The wedding will take place at 8 p.m., Saturday, March 4, in St. John's Anglican Church with Rev. Grahame Baker officiating. — (Gordon Jolley Photos)

PERSONAL MENTION

By Dorothy Wrotnowski

Anyone who has once lived in Victoria seems always to carry fond memories. And almost everyone has a longing to return, even for a short visit.

Such it was for Heather Osler who lived here as a small girl.

Heather who now lives in Somerset, England, where she is furthering her career in commercial art, flew out from England a couple of days after Christmas and leaves again today from Vancouver to fly home via New York. Her sister Debbie, now married, also lives in England.

Heather's family were well known when they lived in Victoria. Her grandparents, the late Col. and Mrs. R. T. Sharland built Queenswood House at Ten Mile Point, long a Victoria show house until it was gutted by fire in 1958.

Her mother, Mrs. W. H. Boothe, who died in Durban, South Africa two years ago, was known to her friends as "Peah." Heather's father, the late Kenneth Osler, was killed in a flying accident many years ago.

While in Victoria, Heather stayed with Dr. and Mrs. Kemble Greenwood, the N. H. C. Crumps and Mrs. Margaret Queale. She also went to Comox to see her grandfather, Mr. G. P. Osler before crossing to Vancouver.

Over in West Vancouver yesterday afternoon, Mrs. Himie Koshevoy entertained at tea for Heather. Guests included ex-Victorians, Mrs. Pat Lindsay, Mrs. John Hedley, Mrs. John Waters and Mrs. Jack Bissett, all old friends of Heather's mother.

100 Years Jan. 10

I wonder if Mrs. James Vawden of Nanaimo is going to be the first Canadian to celebrate her 100th birthday this Centennial year.

"It really is clever of grandmother to have arranged this" says her granddaughter, Mrs. Derek Carrigan of Victoria.

Mrs. Vawden who still lives in her own home in Nanaimo and which she still looks after herself, as well as the garden, went to Vancouver for Christmas and New Year. She has been staying with her granddaughter, Miss Kay Kermode in West Vancouver.

So her 100th birthday party on Tuesday, Jan. 10 will be held in West Vancouver.

Going over from Victoria will be Mrs. Carrick who has made the cake, and another granddaughter, Mrs. York Bruce. Altogether there will be 10 grandchildren and 12 great-grandchildren at the party.

Mrs. Vawden came out from Ontario when she was 18 years of age to live in Nanaimo which has been her home ever since.

She married the year after her arrival and had two children, Erain Vawden and Mrs. Edward Kermode, both of whom have predeceased her.

All during her 82 years of life in Nanaimo Mrs. Vawden has been an active member of St. Paul's Church.

Recalls Grand Old Lady

The death of "Gwendolen Lady Beau, grand old lady of Surrey public life who lavished hospitality on Canadian soldiers during the Second World War," has brought back memories to others than soldiers alone.

It was in 1938 that Miss Sylvia King of Duncan, now Mrs. W. A. Creighton of Victoria, made her first trip to Britain.

Her prospective father-in-law, Brig. A. J. Creighton, CBE, ED, gave Sylvia a letter to Lady Beau.

Brig. Creighton was Officer Commanding of the Seaforth Highlanders when they were billeted in the former Beau home, Priest Hill, near Oxted. He has kept up the friendship with Lady Beau and her son, Glanvill during the years.

While Sylvia was in England for five months, Lady Beau literally took the young Canadian under her wing. First she sent her granddaughter, Elizabeth Beau, to meet her and bring her to Oxted. She insisted Sylvia call her grandma — put her car and chauffeur at her disposal and in general made the young girl welcome.

Lady Beau also saw to it that Sylvia visit all the places of interest around. Lady Beau was a lecturer with the National Trust, so knew her castles and the country history better than most.

Beau horses were there to ride and she was taken to meet many well-known personalities. And there were many nights at the theatre.

Sylvia says that Lady Beau was truly the Great Old Lady and knows that she contributed so very much to making her stay in Britain so packed with interesting memories.

Donations Made By IODE

It was voted to donate $30 to the Victorian Order of Nurses to buy cod liver oil at the recent meeting of Esquimalt Chapter IODE, held in the Lincoln Road home of regent Mrs. C. A. Dodimead. Services convener Mrs. R. R. Bensen reported that flowers had been given to the Veteran's Hospital.

Supplies for two holiday hampers had been bought by Mrs. A. L. Oakley, assisted by Mrs. M. Hall. Mrs. A. W. Smith had also donated a cake, and Mrs. Hall, a dressed doll. Members had attended a showing of films by two University of Victoria students attending a recent seminar in Turkey, reported educational convener Mrs. Hall. She, Mrs. Oakley and Mrs. G. P. Clarke were named members of the nominating committee.

Co-hostesses for the evening were Mrs. A. Hatch, Mrs. M. H. Saar and Mrs. W. E. Abrahead.

Birthday Dance

The exuberance of youth was in the fore at the party given by Mr. and Mrs. John Nation on Wednesday evening for their daughter, Deborah, on her 15th birthday, and for their son Peter. The party was held at Pandora's Box and it is safe to say that the old building on Wharf Street hadn't been so lively for many a year.

The 75 teen-agers who all love their music loud, loud, had a real ball as they danced to their popular band, Blues by Five. A highlight was the appearance of folk singer Valde.

The engagement is announced of Miss Marie Cooper, daughter of Mrs. Esther Cooper, Saanichton, and the late Mr. Martin Cooper, to Mr. Wally Gait, son of Mr. and Mrs. Victor Gait, 5287 Santa Clara Avenue. The wedding will take place at 3 p.m., Saturday, Feb. 4, in Our Lady of Assumption Church, West Saanich Road. Father William Mudge will officiate.

Ann Landers

Dear Ann Landers: My boy friend is a graduate student at a well-known university here on the West Coast. He is very bright and has won many honors. I'm telling you this not to brag but to let you know that he's really not a moron—which is what you will probably think after I tell you my problem.

My little poodle, Nicole, is very dear to me. My boy friend has an airedale. The last three times my boy friend has come to see me he has yelled from the porch, "Put your dog in the basement. I brought Scotty along." I have done as he asked. It so happens that I don't like to put Nicole in the basement and I don't see why he should bring his mutt over and make demands on me.

Yesterday he pulled this stunt again and I told him to take Scotty home and come back alone. Would you believe that he and that dumb hound sat outside in the car for one solid hour? Finally he drove off in a huff and called me from his place to say I was a spoiled brat.

I say he is the spoiled brat and that he owes me an apology. What do you say?—STILL SIZZLING

Dear Sizz: No one should bring a dog when he goes visiting unless he has checked in advance and gotten the O.K.

A young man who is so attached to his kaw wow that he can't leave him home when he goes to see his girl is too childish to go with girls.

Dear Ann Landers: Mom passed away several months ago and Dad and I miss her very much. Dad tries to cheer up both himself and me by taking me places Friday and Saturday evenings.

Last Friday we went to a cocktail lounge where there was dancing. Several fellows I knew from school (I'm a junior) were there slugging it. Not one fellow asked me in dance. This made me very depressed.

Do you think they were afraid of my father? Please answer as I am really in the dumps over this.—A.P.

Dear A.P.: I'm sure your hunch is correct and I hope your dad will think of another way to cheer up both himself and you. Taking a teen-age daughter to a cocktail lounge is not my idea of a solution to any problem.

Dear Ann Landers: I fell in love with a married man. I didn't realize until later that I was not his first affair. His wife realized it, however, and decided she had had enough of his playing around. She divorced him.

Now his sons want nothing to do with him. He is not permitted to see his grandchildren. His business associates no longer include him in their social plans. At dinner tonight he looked at me through eyes of hate —as if it was all my fault.

Let this letter be a warning to all single girls who are cozying up to married men with hopes for the future. I wish to heaven I had never seen this character and I'm sure he wishes he had never seen me.—ASHES IN MY MOUTH

Dear Ashes: Your story is such a common one that I am printing it only because some people have to see or hear something four dozen times before they get the idea.

India Preserves Eggs

NEW DELHI (AP) — Indian researchers report a means of preserving eggs without refrigeration—a boon both to farmers and to millions of consumers.

In India's tropical heat, eggs spoil rapidly and this raises prices.

The government food research institute at Mysore, in southern India, coats eggs with a petroleum derivative mixed with anti-fungus and anti-bacteria agents. It says this keeps them in good condition for 10 days at 100 degrees, four weeks at room temperature and 12 weeks at 55.

The cost of the coating is one rupee (about 13 cents) for 500 eggs. The government will market the product soon, the announcement said.

India's problem state of Kerala, where Communists once ruled for 26 months, is the largest egg producer. It supplies 500,000 eggs a day to different parts of India. This preservation process may help the Kerala farmers to sell more, thus helping to strike at one of the root causes of economic discontent.

Albert Reid To Speak

The first meeting of the New Year of the L'Alliance Francaise de Victoria will take place at the Art Gallery Monday, Jan. 9 at 2:30 p.m., when Mr. Albert Reid will be the guest speaker. His subject — Promenade.

Mr. Reid, who received his early education in England, Belgium and Switzerland, came to Canada in 1911, where he began his newspaper career in the province of Quebec. For many years he was on the staff of the Montreal Gazette, gaining wide experience, later moving to Sherbrooke to become editor of the Daily Record and following that, founder and publisher of le Forum, a French-language weekly.

Mr. Reid served with the Intelligence Corps in France and Italy during the First World War and, in the Second World War, was attached to the phychological warfare branch in Algiers. Setting up newspapers and initiating broadcasts in English, French, Italian and German was a feature of this man's ability.

Retired, Mr. Reid lives at Gordon Head.

The meeting will be open to the public and for those wishing to become members of L'Alliance for the balance of the season may join now for half-membership dues.

For further information apply to Mrs. E. E. Bridgen, secretary-treasurer, at 383-3577.

Mr. and Mrs. Charles W. Chapman, 2635 Roseberry Avenue, announce the forthcoming marriage of their second daughter, Janet Kathleen, to Mr. Paul Wesley Wenninger, son of Rev. and Mrs. Joseph C. Wenninger of San Francisco, Calif. The wedding will take place on Saturday, Jan. 28, at 9 p.m., in the Alliance Church, 1039 Yates Street. Rev. D. W. Chapman and Rev. Wenninger will officiate.

Duncan Students Plan Good Theatre Season

DUNCAN — Students from Cowichan High School and Mount Prevost Junior High will combine to present a season of theatre next April.

Plans include two major productions and three one-act plays to be presented in the Mount Prevost auditorium.

The major production by the senior students will be The Ghost Train, a comedy-thriller now famous in the repertoire of theatre.

Lead parts will be played by Ken Faught, Diane Demille, Valentyne De Leeuw, Ron Arnold, May Ogg, Donna Bolton, Douglas Ledding, Carol Daniels, Malcolm Crickett and Graem McCauley.

Twenty-five other senior students will be working on the technical side of the production.

The Grade nine production will be an adaptation of the famous Hans Andersen story The Snow Queen.

A special ballet sequence has been designed for this production.

Lead parts will be played by Beverley Glenn, Kerry Hanham, Alan Morton, Dan Kinney, Anne Pickard, Heather McDonald, Vicki Radcliffe, Beverley Noton, Marsha Turner, Gerald Jaggers, Harold Quesnel, Winnie McKenzie and Brenda Jenkinson.

About 50 grade eight students will also be taking part in the production.

Many of the students are experiencing theatre work for the first time.

Plaque For Heard

Around The Island

QUALICUM BEACH —Warren Heard was honored at a recent meeting of the volunteer fire department, on the eve of his departure to Victoria. He will take up a post with the Victoria fire department. He was presented with a plaque to commemorate his service to the department.

Heard was with the Qualicum Beach fire department for 13 years, and for five years was the fire chief. He was also the local assistant fire marshal for three years, and was one of the ambulance drivers for six years.

During his time with the department, he saw the acquisition of the new fire truck, and also the purchase of a considerable amount of new equipment, making the department one of the best equipped village fire departments in British Columbia.

DUNCAN— A 37-year-old man was sentenced to 15 days in jail for being intoxicated in a public place.

He was charged with the same offence Dec. 21 and was fined $50 to be paid by January 6.

The court prosecutor said Roderick George had enough money to drink but could not pay his fine.

CAMPBELL RIVER—Modern Trends in Education will be the topic discussed at a symposium to be held on Tuesday in the junior high school.

Speakers will be Mrs. Isobel Cull of Vancouver, past president of the B.C. Teachers' Federation; William Allester, director of professional development; John Walsh, director of elementary and secondary education, Courtenay, and Bruce Saunders, chairman of the local school board.

Roderick L. Haig-Brown, well-known author and magistrate, will be moderator at the symposium, which is being held under the auspices of the Campbell River and District Teachers' Association.

DUNCAN — A twenty-year-old Duncan youth was remanded for eight days. Robert Eckert pleaded not guilty to obstruction, causing a disturbance and entering a licensed premises.

QUALICUM BEACH — Frank E. Kirchner and Ian M. Hamilton were sworn in at the first meeting of the 1967 village council.

Chairman Charles Darkis thanked Stewart Harford for the work he had done as building inspector and assistant fire marshal during the past year, and also thanked the village foreman, Bill Penman, and the village work crew for their efforts over the year.

CAMPBELL RIVER — Donations are still coming in to the Rotary Club's annual Christmas drive for funds for the Crippled Children's Hospital in Vancouver. Nine hundred dollars was collected by Tom Hargreaves and his Santa helpers in a one-day blitz on downtown streets. They hope, with the donations still coming in, they will reach their objective of $1,000.

Tofino News

Reserve Home For First Baby

TOFINO — The centennial baby was born at 8 p.m. Jan. 2 at Tofino General Hospital.

It was a girl, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Chester Brown of Opitsate Reserve. The girl weighed eight pounds, four ounces.

The only accident reported over the New Year's weekend in this area happened on New Year's morning, when a car driven by Douglas Robson Jr. skidded on the road and turned over. There were no serious injuries.

Things are looking up in this district, and the first outstanding event of the centennial year will be the opening of a new federal building in Tofino.

The building will house the post office, fisheries office and Indian Health centre. The official opening date is yet to be announced.

8 CARD OF THANKS

We want to express our sincere appreciation to our many friends and neighbors for the kindness and sympathy extended to us at the death of our beloved husband and father. Also our deepest thanks for the many expressions of love in the floral tributes in his memory.—Frances Olsen, Wanda and Dianne.

9 IN MEMORIAM

BABCOCK—In loving memory of Henriette Tupper Babcock who passed away December 28th, 1946. Still sadly mourned by family and husband.

BARNARD — In loving memory of Henry Barnard, who passed away January 8, 1946.
—His affectionate wife and family.

HILL—In loving memory of my husband, Lloyd Glover Hill, who passed away January 8, 1946.
Up above where angels dwell,
Some day I know we shall,
I'll clasp his hand in the better land.
Never to part again.
—Forever loved by his wife Evelyn.

LINDSAY—In memory of my father, Hugh Lindsay, died January 8, 1945.
"There is a link death cannot sever
Love and remembrance last forever."
His loving daughter, Ella Bellrage.

MOONEY — In memory of Jack E. Mooney, who passed away Jan. 5, 1946.
Gone but not from memory's page,
Your face a heart holds dear;
Fond memories linger every day,
Remembrance keeps him near.

Winning Contract

By HOWARD SCHENKEN and RICHARD L. FREY

There is only one sure way to handle a player who consistently refuses to lead your suit — out against him. But there is also an art in arranging your bids so that your suit is worth leading.

Before you overcall, you should consider the lead-directing value of the call you are about to make. Sometimes this will influence your choice of bids, as it does on the following hands. Neither vulnerable, the opponent on your right opens one diamond. What do you say?

a. ♠ A Q J 8 3 ♡ Q 9 5 ♢ 8 ♣ K 6 3 2

b. ♠ 10 8 6 5 3 ♡ A 8 ♢ K 6 ♣ A Q 10 4

c. ♠ 10 7 ♡ A 8 6 3 ♢ A Q 5 ♣ A 10 5 3

d. ♠ K Q J 6 3 ♡ 8 4 ♢ 10 7 2 ♣ 8 6 5

ANSWERS TO BRIDGE QUIZ:

a. One spade. Normally we like to double for takeout on this kind of hand-pattern. But in this instance, the lead-directing potential of the one spade overcall is decisive.

b. Double. This is the opposite side of the coin. It seldom pays to overcall in a suit that you may not want partner to lead, so we prefer the takeout double even though the hand lacks support for the unbid heart suit.

c. Pass. Although this hand is strong on high-card points, the heart suit is not robust enough for an overcall and a double would be dangerous with such a weak spade holding. The best chance to win points is to keep quiet and hope the opponents misguess the cards.

d. One spade. Obviously, a bid on only 6 high-card points is risky, but the lead-directing value of the overcall is so great that we are willing to take the blame if things go wrong.

New Tent Shape—Jumper or Dress

PRINTED PATTERN
M289 SIZES 10-18
by Sylvia de Gay

Get right into the fashion swing with Sylvia de Gay's version of the trendsetting tent shape. Printed Pattern M289 is both a jumper and a dress — as much fun to sew as it is to wear. The line widens from a small, yoked top into a whirling hemline. Zips down the front so there are no buttonholes. No collar, no waist seams, no busy details at all. It's all pure line. Choose flannel, tweed textures or plush velour. Ideal for double knit.

Printed Pattern M289 is available in Misses' sizes 10, 12, 14, 16, 18. Size 14 requires 2¼ yards 45-inch fabric.

Send one dollar for Printed Pattern M289 to The Daily Colonist, Pattern Department, 60 Front Street West, Toronto, Ont. Please print plainly your name, address with style number and size.

See 57 cream-of-the-collections designer originals in our Couture Pattern Book. Plus 50c free coupon — apply to any $1 pattern in book. Send 50c now for new Couture Book.

Next week — watch for a prominent designer pattern by Ben Reig.

WHAT'S THIS??
NO INTEREST!
NO UTILITY BILLS!?

Are you concerned with the current high interest rates and other costs associated with a home? Perhaps you will not take me seriously when I suggest to you that you DON'T HAVE TO meet these costs from your own paycheck. All interest and utilities will be taken care of by the OTHER GUY when you buy this modern 5-year-old SIDE-BY-SIDE DUPLEX. "BEAUTIFULLY PANELLED GORDON HEAD HOME"

A magnificent 1-year-old, 3 or 4-bedroom home. Enjoy luxurious living with a view of the sea from the patio. On the main floor there is a large living room with a feature fireplace, a separate dining room, an ultra modern kitchen with all the built-in features. A utility room, two bedrooms and two bathrooms. On the ground level is the entrance hall, another bedroom, a large family room with fireplace, storage room, another bathroom and a double carport/garage. End price of $29,950 with conventional terms. Call RUSSELL DUNN or PETER W. BARDON, 385-6741.

"IF IT'S TRUE"

that a lovely home literally "pays for itself," this beauty could inspire a Horatio! Built by master craftsman and maintained with lovely care, the main floor features large living room, guest dining room, a "cook's dream" kitchen, three beautiful bedrooms, and 4-pce bath, enhanced by gleaming floors and soft-tones decor. The [illegible] room in the full basement and the 4th bedroom studded, floored and wired "under the eaves" suggest at least $30,000 particularly in this beautiful Sienkiewicz area, but the actual price is hundreds lower and with good terms, YOU can buy it, so see it FIRST in '67. REV. McARTHUR, 385-6741 anytime.

"AT LAST"

We have obtained an exclusive listing go one of the best streets in Fairfield. An immaculate three-bedroom home with a large living room and dining room. A full high basement with a lovely panelled den and a fourth bedroom. This house has all the modern conveniences and is close to shopping centre, bus and schools. At $19,500 you cannot go wrong. To view call JESSIE McGRATH or PETER EUGENER. 385-6741.

"WHISPERING BOUGHS"

Here's a mint fresh, approved VLA in beautiful Braefoot Bay! The "low step" modern home features panelled living room, bright electric kitchen with cheery dining area, three lovely bedrooms and 4-pce bath. Large enough for family living, compact enough for easy care, retirement, this is a real buy at $18,750. REV. McARTHUR, 385-6741 anytime.

"TREES AND ROCKS"

May be your pleasure and this 3-year-old home is well situated on curved lot. Fireplace in large living room. Sundeck off dining room. Attractive kitchen with eating area and many extras. 3 bedrooms, 4-pce. bath. Full cement basement with space for rec. room. Price $17,950. MRS. RUTH SQUIRES, 385-6741; Res. 479-3764.

"MODERN STANDARD"

A 6-room bungalow in a semi-rural location featuring all the modern developments such as wall ovens, built in range, stainless steel sinks, sundeck, recreation room and best of all lots of financing. Mother, the Church Is Burning

By KLAUS MUENTER

DUNCAN — Many suns have risen behind rugged Mount Tzouhalem and many moons have reflected their light in the bays around Duncan since Mrs. Joseph Elliott was born as Mary Theresa Canute Lemo, March 20, 1889.

In the small and clean cottage on the Somenos reserve she shares with her husband Joseph Elliott, she remembers those many bygone years with pride, humor and some sadness.

The gutteral sound of the Cowichan native tongue becomes a soft flow when she speaks to her husband.

She recalls her grandfather as a handsome man who delivered merchandise in a stone boat and eventually had to give up his general store near St. Ann's Church, because as a friend of women he had too many charge accounts, which "melted with the ice in the spring."

She was born at Comiaken near the historic stone church which had been built a few decades before by Catholic missionary Peter Rondeault. Mrs. Elliott grew up on her father's farm.

Visitors to her parents' house were amazed to see the little girl standing on a stool and washing dishes.

They told her mother it was not right to make a little girl work like that, but her mother replied "when they are young, is the time to teach them."

A strict family code forbade the girl to play with other children and when her parents had to go on a trip she was left with older friends of the family.

For hours she sat and listened to the tales of the old people.

She heard of Cowichan Indians who were taken prisoners of war by Haida warriors but managed to escape from the Queen Charlotte Islands, and after many privations eventually returned to their homes.

She learned that one of her ancestors, Classeston, became chief of the Cowichan Indians after he was recognized by Sir James Douglas as a wise man.

The governor and his party in the early 50s had landed at Fulford Harbor on Salt Spring Island where a large group of Indians was camping.

None of the Indians came forward to answer Douglas' question on what they were doing until Classeston spoke up.

Mrs. Elliott said he was the first Cowichan Indian to be recognized as chief by the government, and by the Indian people as well.

Classeston was eventually married by Father Rondeault, who had urged him to give up his other nine wives, most of whom had born him children.

Mrs. Elliott said her mother as a small girl was abducted by her grandfather Scoqththeiam, and taken back by canoe from her birthplace at Port Gamble to Klaem Klaem Alutz in the Cowichan Valley.

She was reared by friends on Salt Spring Island and when reaching womanhood, she returned to the Cowichan tribe which conducted a mask dance to protect her from evil and misconduct.

One of the Cowichan Indians, Jean Baptiste, reckoned Josephine would make a good wife for his son, and Mrs. Elliott was the first child born to the young couple.

Much of his work as chief, Baptiste had to delegate to Joe Cakkeayel because he was too busy with his farm.

One episode of her childhood days still stands out crisp and clear because of its ironic tragedy.

One of her smaller brothers was badly injured in a fall out of a maple tree.

A medicine man was called and the little girl was told to leave the house while the Indian doctor performed his rituals.

She gazed over her father's farm and froze when she noticed flames shooting out of the steeple of St. Ann's Church.

She ran back to the house to tell her parents but was told to stay away while the medicine man worked on her injured brother.

Too small to protest, and used to strict discipline, she obeyed.

The church burned to the ground.

Her brother John died of internal injuries.

As she grew up her father's farm, which produced fine horses, cattle, hogs, sheep and poultry, she became noted as a maker of good butter. She finally decided to work for white people in nearby Duncan.

When she married Willy Joe Sesamatse, her father gave her the horse she had cared for since it had been a foal, and along with it he gave her a rubber-wheeled buggy and a new harness.

Her husband died in 1928 and her daughter Angelina passed away three years ago. She married her present husband, Joseph Elliott, in 1939.

Jury Can't Diagnose Plane Crash Cause

The crash killed Cpl. Jean Roy.

The inquest jury was unable to reach a conclusion on what went wrong with the small basement model.

There were two RCAF flight lieutenants on the inquest jury.

The jury said "we list the cause of the crash as unknown on the basis of evidence presented."

The plane was built by the young man who was stationed at CFB, Comox, at the time of his death.

Evidence revealed he had about 25 hours flying time to his credit, and a flying instructor termed his as a person who would be very careful in his flying habits.

Despite reports from eye witnesses at the time of the crash which indicated a wing fell away from the plane, there was no evidence introduced at the inquest to substantiate this suggestion.

In the opinion of two witnesses there was no evidence that the wing had torn loose.

D.O.T. officials who did not appear at the inquest, submitted a report which showed the aircraft carried a certificate of registration, flight permit, pilot held a license and qualifications for the type of aircraft, it was loaded within the allowable weight limit.

No evidence was found of any malfunction of the engine or flight controls prior to the accident. There was evidence the aircraft collided with trees.

A medical report indicated the pilot suffered compound fractures, laceration of right lung, contusions to both lungs, partial rupture of diaphragm and both kidneys, multiple lacerations and contusions.

It added there was no evidence of any pre-existing disease which might have contributed to the accident.

From questions asked by the two RCAF jury members and answers given by another RCAF witness the theory was partially advanced that the plane had gone into a stall and in bringing it out the pilot had overcorrected.

Fair Treatment For Tough Trade

NANAIMO — "Fair Treatment on a two-way street." That is the essence of aims of the Western Independent Log Haulers. It was put into words by secretary-treasurer Tom Fisher, in town for the first annual convention of the log haulers.

The association was born at Lake Cowichan Dec. 19, 1965.

The group had a charter by Feb. 4, and the next day members had their first regular meeting.

ALL SIZES

The association consists of log haulers from the Island and mainland inlets, and has members with only one unit to members with as many as 16.

Two such men are president Don Braithwaite, and the secretary-treasurer.

YOUNG DRIVER

Director Norm MacKenzie started when he was 11 years old, and had to have special permission to drive his first truck.

Today he looks as if he doesn't need to have a truck to get logs to market, he's a big man.

Injuries sustained in an airplane crash kept Mr. Braithwaite from the first day of the convention. But against doctor's orders to take it easy for a few weeks, he appeared at the convention Saturday, and was met with an ovation from member.

OBJECTIVE

The reason that they formed was to have a representative body to meet with government bodies, and to co-operate among themselves.

Efficiency within the association and the logging industry as a whole is their objective.

The group has been accepted throughout the logging industry, from those with whom they have contracts, to those who supply their equipment.

BIG INDUSTRY

"It should have been formed 10 years ago," said Mr. Braithwaite.

In only a year, they have accumulated 100 active members, some 15 associate members, and represent a collective million-dollar industry.

COMPETITION

Although the members compete with each other, they hope to develop a co-operative competitive attitude, where fair play in business is the rule.

Their convention was indicative of their collective image, big and worthwhile.

WIVES AWAITED

Equipment was parked outside of the Tally-Ho Motel where the convention was held, and between the 12 functions, members walked about and poked and looked at the displays.

Members shattered the usual idea of a convention — they brought their wives.

13 Treated For Rabies

BUTTONVILLE, Ont. (CP) — Thirteen people in the southern part of York County north of Metropolitan Toronto are being treated for rabies. James Ryan, canine control officer, said about a dozen wild animals found dead in the area have been positively identified as having rabies. Another dozen were household pets, mostly dogs.

Divers struggle to pull car from reservoir near Columbus

SIX BODIES FOUND IN LAKE

COLUMBUS, Ohio (AP)—The bodies of a woman and five of eight children missing since Tuesday morning were recovered Saturday from a car which had plunged into the 30-foot depths of Hoover Reservoir just north of the city.

Search for the bodies of the other three children was suspended temporarily Saturday afternoon due to the depth of the water, low temperature and gusts of 40 m.p.h. winds.

The victims were listed by authorities as Mary Helen Rutherford, 41, of Delaware; her four children, Delores Ann, 18; Bertie Marie, 15; Steven Franklin, 13; Mary Jane, 5; and her two sets of twin nieces, Karen Sue and Sharon Lou, 20 months, and Lisa Ann and Teresa Lynn, 10 months.

Mrs. Rutherford and the children were last seen Tuesday morning when they left for Columbus, where she planned to buy shoes for the children.

Mrs. Rutherford's husband, Charles, reported them missing early Wednesday, but it was not until Thursday that engineers discovered the broken guardrail beside a country road about 30 feet east of a bridge over the reservoir.

Chinese Power Fight Erupts Into Violence

TOKYO (UPI) — China's power struggle has exploded in a wave of violence, torture and atrocities, reports reaching Tokyo said Saturday. Nearly 1,000 Chinese were reported killed or injured in four days of fighting between opposing Red Guards and workers' groups.

Red Guard posters put up in Peking said 54 people were killed, 900 injured and 6,000 arrested in the first major eruption reported since the "cultural revolution" began sweeping China last summer. Czech newsman stationed in Peking said "fingers, noses and ears of captives were chopped off and their tongues cut out."

The Red Guard posters said the violence was centred in Nanking and near Shanghai and raged for four days starting last Tuesday. An estimated 100,000 were reported involved.

Pravda said several thousand Chinese workers clashed with Red Guards in Anhwei province when they stormed into a building where guards were torturing a member of the Chinese Communist party central committee. The Pravda report said "there were casualties in the clash" but did not report the number.

Terror and Tension

The Peking correspondent of the Czech news agency CTK said "terror reigns in Nanking and the situation is full of tensions. Traffic is paralyzed and telephone communication is interrupted with the rest of the world." Rail service between Nanking and Shanghai was reported suspended.

Other Peking reports said that, in addition to the bloody rioting between factions split over the rule of party chairman Mao Tse-tung, Mao faces opposition from some provincial and "grass roots" officials.

The reports said the first major riots broke out Tuesday in Kiang Su province and resulted in 14 deaths and 400 people injured.

Then on Thursday and Friday, Nanking exploded in more bloody rioting with 40 other deaths and 500 reported "seriously wounded."

The riots disrupted all railway traffic between Peking and Hankow for two days. There was no indication from Peking Saturday whether the rioting had been halted and train service resumed.

The posters indicated the riots were caused by collusion within the ranks of the Nanking "cultural revolution" committee.

Mayor and Others

Japanese reporters said it was believed in Peking the Nanking riots were started on instructions from Tao Chu, former party propaganda chief believed among the first purged last year.

The posters claimed the Red Guard units were led by Litzu Ying, secretary of the committee of Kiang Su province.

Shanghai Mayor Tsao Ti-chiu was held responsible for the clashes in the districts near that city. The posters said the mayor and "a handful of reactionary bourgeois followers plotted the incidents."

The official New China News Agency has made no mention of riots or posters.

Other posters said the Red Guard attempt to criticize publicly Premier Chou En-lai has fizzled out and Mao has admitted making a blunder when he divided the party politburo into two factions.

A Peking-based Kyodo correspondent said Red Guard posters criticizing Chou were torn down and replaced by pro-Chou slogans and posters.

The new banners were posted in the name of the Shanghai Red Guards and warned any attacks against Chou would be crushed by all means.

Blast-torn motel in downtown Las Vegas

Suicide Blast Shreds Motel, Killing Six

LAS VEGAS, Nev. (AP) — A three-storey motel was virtually destroyed Saturday by an apparent suicidal blast that killed six persons and injured eight.

The downtown area was rocked at 1:25 a.m. by an explosion police believe was touched off by someone firing a bullet into dynamite.

Police said the blast centred in Room 214 of the Orbit Inn, registered to a Mr. and Mrs. R. J. Paris of Hollywood, Calif. They were driving a car with Florida licence plates.

CHARRED PISTOL

George Franklin Jr., district attorney, said a charred .25-calibre automatic pistol was found in the alley behind the motel close to a severed human hand. He said two rounds of ammunition of the same calibre were found in the Florida car.

Authorities said a wallet with identification cards issued to R. J. Paris—and containing an Arizona permit to carry explosives—were found in what remained of Room 214. The wallet also contained a California driver's licence.

Franklin said it appeared someone had fired the gun into the dynamite taken to the motel room.

Detective Paul Guias said, however, that no suicide note had been found.

Police found wires in the back seat of the Florida car which they could not explain.

Franklin said this was an indication someone had planned a suicide "probably right in the middle of downtown," then decided to detonate the dynamite in the motel.

If true, this would be the most spectacular suicide yet in this famed gambling resort.

The 73-unit motel, virtually demolished by the blast, is four blocks from a cluster of downtown casinos and two miles from the lavish Las Vegas Strip of gambling resorts.

The dead were not identified immediately.

Three bodies were found in one room, two in another and one in a third. Thirty rooms were occupied at the time and about 60 persons were in the motel.

Hanoi Makes Clear

Conditions For Talks Unaltered

MOSCOW (UPI) — North Vietnam has declared officially it has not altered its conditions for Vietnam talks, Moscow radio said Saturday.

It said the North Vietnam news agency issued the official statement "in order to dispel rumors in the Western press that Hanoi has changed its position."

The United States was reported checking out any possible shift in Hanoi's position through the current visit there by Victor Moore, Canadian representative of the International Control Commission — the body set up by the 1954 Geneva accords to supervise the Vietnam peace.

IN LIGHT OF INTERVIEW

The Moscow broadcast was made in the light of an interview Harrison Salisbury, assistant managing editor of the New York Times, had in Hanoi this past week with North Vietnamese Premier Pham Van Dong.

Salisbury indicated that during the interview, Dong possibly hinted that the four Communist demands for a settlement of the Vietnam war may not necessarily be preconditions for peace negotiations.

Moscow radio said the Hanoi explanation of North Vietnam's stand "bases itself on the four-point program which was reaffirmed earlier in the week by Prime Minister Pham Van Dong in an interview with Harrison Salisbury . . ."

MAIN POINTS

Moscow radio said the two "main points" of the Hanoi government demands are:

- An unconditional and immediate stop to the American bombing of North Vietnam.
- The withdrawal of U.S. forces from South Vietnam.

The Communists also demand that the Viet Cong be recognized as the legitimate representatives of the South Vietnamese people and that the people be allowed to decide their own future, including reunification of the two nations.

FLIES TO HANOI

Meanwhile, highly informed sources said Victor Moore, chairman of the Canadian delegation to the three-nation ICC, has flown to Hanoi from Saigon to sound out the North Vietnamese leadership and attempt to clarify recent statements attributed to them.

The ICC said Moore's trip to Hanoi was just a farewell visit because he will be leaving his post shortly but it was understood that he actually made the trip at the behest of American authorities.

(In Ottawa, however, a spokesman for the external affairs department also said Moore was simply paying a "farewell visit" to Hanoi because his ICC appointment expires at the end of the month. The spokesman said such a trip was "normal" under the circumstances and "there is no-

Cong Vanish Before Delta Sweep

SAIGON (AP)—U.S. Marines continued to meet only token sniper resistance today as they pushed through mud and mangrove swamps of the Mekong Delta on the third day of a campaign that could make this the bloodiest year of the Vietnamese war.

SEVENTH RAID

Far to the north, U.S. headquarters reported a Marine patrol suffered heavy casualties when it detonated a large land mine 11 miles northwest of Hue. The size of the patrol was not divulged. The term heavy casualties usually means that a unit has been put out of action.

In air activity, long-range B-52 bombers pounded a suspected Viet Cong headquarters before dawn today in the seventh raid in three days against Communist positions menacing Saigon from the north. They struck in Binh Duong Province 28 miles northwest of the capital.

U.S. headquarters said most air raids over North Vietnam on Saturday were confined to the southern panhandle and the Dien Bien Phu area. Poor flying conditions restricted air strikes everywhere.

COPTER LOST

Headquarters reported that a Marine cargo helicopter was shot down by enemy ground fire Saturday 27 miles southwest of Da Nang. The chopper was on a resupply mission. Headquarters said there were no casualties and the supplies were recovered. It was the third U.S. helicopter lost to enemy action Saturday and raised the total lost in the war to 254.

OUT OF MAINSTREAM

In the massive sweep by U.S. Marines and Vietnamese through the waist-deep vehicle-miring swamps of the Mekong Delta, headquarters reported enemy casualties so far as three killed and five captured. Allied casualties were termed light.

The heavily populated delta, with mangrove thickets and rice paddies laced b 25,000 navigable miles of waterways, has been out of the martial mainstream because of the prospect that sharp action against indi-

PEKING (Reuters) — China's state-owned banks have stopped cashing travellers cheques issued by U.S. banks. Officials at the Bank of China gave no explanation, except that they were acting on instructions.

March B.C. Tory Meet To Elect New Leaders

VANCOUVER (CP) — The B.C. Progressive Conservative Association will elect a new leader and president at its annual convention opening March 4, president Stuart Fleming said Saturday.

Mr. Fleming said the party would also line up possible candidates for the next federal and provincial elections.

The party has been without a leader since E. Davie Fulton resigned two years ago to return to federal politics. It does not have representation in the B.C. legislature.

Medical March Protests War

NEW YORK (AP) — Three hundred doctors, nurses, researchers and personnel from the medical profession demonstrated Saturday against the war in Vietnam.

The protestors encircled the Bellevue Hospital compound, between 26th and 30th streets on First Avenue.

The demonstration was held to protest the amount of money spent on the war and what pickets described as a lack of money spent for medical research, improvement of public health facilities and better wages.

The protest was sponsored by the New York Medical Committee to End the War in Vietnam.

Confidante in Dock

Baker Faces Tax, Theft Charges

WASHINGTON (AP) — Bobby Baker, who built a fortune while he worked as secretary to the U.S. Senate's Democratic majority, goes to trial Monday on charges of tax evasion, theft and conspiracy.

The possible consequences of conviction—48 years in prison and $47,000 in fines—are far greater than the denunciation the Senate rules committee gave him in 1965.

Guesses on the length of the Baker trial run to three months.

The 38-year-old former confidante of many Democratic senators, including the then majority leader Lyndon B. Johnson, was indicted a year ago by a federal grand jury following a 15-month investigation. He has pleaded not guilty.

Imports Soar Before Law?

Dowding Probes Cycle Lid 'Leak'

VANCOUVER (CP) — New Democrat MLA Gordon Dowding said Friday he is investigating an allegation that large numbers of motorcycle safety helmets were imported into British Columbia just before legislation making them compulsory was passed.

Mr. Dowding said he is concerned about the allegation which is contained in a brief being sent to all MLAs.

Wayne Edwards, 27-year-old heavy equipment operator who drew up the brief, hints at government corruption in the matter.

In an interview, Mr. Edwards said he is seeking proof through the trade and commerce department that there was a sharp rise in the number of helmets being imported just prior to the legislation July 1, 1965.

"It certainly was not common knowledge among MLAs," said Mr. Dowding.

Native Diver Takes Up Just Where He Left Off

Habs Snatch Squeaker From 'Homer' Wings

DETROIT 2, MONTREAL 4

BOSTON 3, TORONTO 3

Detroit Red Wings have Paul Henderson back and Gordie Howe again leading their attack but unless they can do something about winning away from home ice they're not likely to become one of the four National Hockey League playoff clubs.

The Wings played their 16th game away from home last night, and failed to win for the 16th time although Howe gave them a 2-0 lead with his 12th and 13th goals of the season.

CAME FROM BEHIND

Montreal Canadiens came from behind to pick up a 4-3 win which boosted their fourth-place margin over the Wings to nine points with two games in hand.

On home ice, the Wings have been good, winning 11, losing five and tying two of 18 games while scoring 66 goals and allowing 43.

On the road, where they have been outscored, 31-72, the Wings have only a tie with Boston's last-place Bruins.

RAPID PAIR

In a wide-open, free-skating game last night which featured some outstanding goalkeeping, particularly by Montreal's Charlie Hodge in the first period, the Wings were beaten by goals 30 seconds apart in the third period.

Howe got the only goal, cashing the rebound of a shot by Parker MacDonald, although the clubs levelled 29 shots at Hodge and Detroit's Roger Crozier, who was also brilliant.

HODGE SAVED DAY

Hodge saved Canadiens with great stops on breakaway chances for Alex Delvecchio, Norm Ullman and Ted Hampson but made a mistake in the second period as he gloved a long shot by Howe. The puck slipped out of his hand and into the net.

Only 32 seconds later, Canadiens got back into the game when a passout from behind the net by Ralph Backstrom deflected off John Ferguson's chest and the puck caromed behind Crozier.

WINGS PROTEST

Wings protested to no avail that the goal was illegal.

A great individual play by Dick Duff tied the score in the ninth minute of the third period. He beat Crozier with a sizzling backhand after stickhandling from the left side to the right.

Duff got what proved to be the winner less than five minutes later, driving the puck over Crozier, who had swept it out in a fantastic save on Henri Richard's try from the left.

VIEWS of SPORT

By Red Smith

If anybody doubts that professional football has become a one-man game, he might consider these figures:

Over the last two seasons, the St. Louis Cardinals' record of games won, lost and tied was 11-2-1 when their good quarterback, Charlie Johnson, was fit and 2-12 when Johnson was ailing or unavailable.

In other words, a good team with a top quarterback can be beaten now and then and a good team without a first-rate quarterback can win once in a while, but the quarterback is the difference between first place and last.

The Green Bay Packers and the Kansas City Chiefs are good football teams. Len Dawson of the Chiefs is a good quarterback, the best passer in the American League, a competent scrambler when he has to scramble, and a leader who, says Hank Stram, his coach in college and the pros, "either makes the big play or brings it out of one of the others."

Bart Starr of Green Bay is a great quarterback, and this is the chief reason why the Packers are regarded here as the logical favorites to join the affluent society en masse when the loot is whacked up after the first annual Gravy Bowl a week from Sunday.

Nice Boy from Alabama

As a landslide winner of the National League's most valuable player award, Starr has at long last, in his 11th season as a professional, won general recognition for the qualities Vince Lombardi saw in him when Lombardi arrived in Green Bay eight years ago.

"When I joined this team," the coach told Bill Heinz, when they were writing "Run To Daylight!" three years ago, "the opinion around here and in the league was that Starr would never make it. They said he couldn't throw well enough and wasn't tough enough, that he had no confidence in himself and no one had confidence in him. . . .

"After looking at the movies that first pre-season, I came to the conclusion that he did have the ability — the arm, the ball-handling techniques and the intelligence — but what he needed was confidence.

"He is the son of a Regular Army master sergeant and he grew up on Army posts and Air Force bases and he still calls me 'Sir.' When I first met him he struck me as so polite and so self-effacing that I wondered if maybe he wasn't too nice a boy to be the authoritarian leader your quarterback must be.

"He impressed me getting ready for our first pre-season game in 1959. At our quarterback meetings, even though he was not first-string, he could repeat almost verbatim everything we had discussed the previous three days and that meant he had a great memory, dedication, and desire. With our success and his own success I have seen his confidence grow.

" 'A couple of years ago,' he said to me the day last summer when he brought his contract into the office, 'I'd have signed anything you gave me, but now you've taught me to be more aggressive and self-assertive and you've given me more confidence, and this is what I want.'

" 'So that's it,' I said. 'Like Frankenstein, I've created a monster'."

In another part of the book Lombardi says: "He is great at picking that defence apart and adjusting, and if I could just get him to be a little more daring he'd be everything. He kills them with those short ones, those singles and doubles, but he doesn't throw for those home runs often because, where Unitas or Layne or Tittle will take a chance with an offensive man and a defensive man going down the field together, he has to be sure that his offensive man has that defensive man beaten."

Bart Maverick of Tomorrow

If Vince had a single mental reservation about Starr three years ago, it was because of the quarterback's preference for conservative play, and even that has changed. Maybe the coach conned him out of it or perhaps Bart saw what happened to Goldwater and decided for himself that a little extremism in pursuit of money was no sin.

Anyhow, that was a plunger who led the Packers to the NFL championship last Sunday. After the Cowboys recovered from a 14-0 deficit to tie the score, he rooked them with a 51-yard bomb to Carroll Dale.

In the last four minutes with the Packers seven points in front he did not run scared. Time and again he put the ball in the air in Green Bay territory going boldly for the first down and defying Dallas to intercept.

"Starr will be 33 years old next Tuesday and it's time he started thinking about an easier way to make a living. Off what he has shown, the advice here would be to get a deck of cards and work the Mississippi river steamboats. He figures to have the stake for it after Jan. 15.

Leafs Show Old Form Slaughter Canucks, 7-0

By BRIAN DOHERTY

VANCOUVER 0, VICTORIA 7

Victoria Maple Leafs, springtime fresh in spite of a killing schedule, blossomed into their old form as they thrashed second-place Vancouver Canucks 7-0 in a Western Hockey League game here Saturday night.

The win moved the Leafs into a fifth-place tie with Los Angeles and left them only five points behind Vancouver.

It was the Leafs' fifth shutout of the season, tops in the league, and it came from a hustling offence, gritty defence and a brilliant goaling job by Gary Smith.

RID OF RUST

In his first four games with the Leafs, Smith allowed 20 goals. But Friday night in Vancouver he showed he has shaken off the cobwebs that gathered during limited action at Rochester when only one shot got past him as the Leafs won, 4-1.

It wasn't as if the Canucks didn't try. Gord Vejprava pounded two great shots within seconds of each other in the opening minutes of the second period on a power play but Smith was unbeatable.

Early in the third period, Marc Dufour shot from close range at an empty net and Smith somehow got his foot in the way.

The Leafs split the game open in the second period after surviving the torrid attack by Vancouver. Goals by Milan Marcetta, Bob Barlow and Bruce Carmichael within five minutes did it.

The Canucks could manage just three shots on Smith in the first period yet trailed only, 1-0. That goal came while Carmichael was serving a Leaf bench penalty and the Canucks were on a power play.

Dick Lamoureux stole the puck and passed to Mike Labadie who hit the post with his shot. The puck bounced free and Labadie slammed it back in.

Larry Keenan showed he was right back in form after his injury lay-off and made Carmichael's goal. He got a break on Vancouver and passed perfectly for the hard-skating left-winger.

Marcetta got a share of the club point-scoring lead with Carmichael with two goals and an assist for a season total of 33 points.

Rollie Wilcox and Mike Laughton got the other Leaf goals as Andy Hebenton had two assists and just missed on two scoring attempts.

The win came at the end of a program which had the Leafs playing six games in eight nights.

Things ease off with the Los Angeles Blades here Wednesday and Saturday and the Oakland Seals coming up for two games the following week.

The Leafs had Canuck's goaltender Don Simmons sweating as the 35-year-old veteran was called on to stop 35 shots, 15 of them in the last period when the Leafs went in for three more goals.

Barlow's third goal of the season came when Simmons moved to the side of the net in an attempt to block play and was caught there.

OAKLAND 6, LOS ANGELES 4

SEATTLE 4, SAN DIEGO 2

Seattle Totems and Oakland Seals closed in on second place in the Western Hockey League last night, scoring victories to wind up one point and two points, respectively, behind the fading Vancouver Canucks.

Totems spotted their season's nemesis, San Diego Gulls, a two-goal lead then came back to take a 4-3 win with two goals in each of the second and third periods.

Seals continued their domination of the high-scoring Los Angeles Blades by scoring a 6-4 win which permitted Victoria Maple Leafs to tie the Blades for fourth place.

Scot Wins Down-Under Grand Prix

AUCKLAND, New Zealand (AP)—Jackie Stewart of Scotland, driving a two-litre BRM, won the New Zealand Grand Prix Saturday by a scant 200 yards from Jim Clark, also of Scotland.

Stewart's average speed was 101 miles per hour. Clark drove a 2.5-litre Lotus.

Dagg, Armstrong Advance

DUNCAN — Rinks skipped by Lyall Dagg and Jim Armstrong of Victoria, Jessie Whittam of Nanaimo and Glen Harper of Duncan all made their way into the next round of curling playdowns at the Duncan Curling Club on Saturday.

Mrs. Whittam, who is supported by Irene Schroh, Bunny Anderson and Isabel Pearson, made the biggest event. She won the Vancouver Island women's zone title in a round-robin final to qualify for the district playdowns.

She went through unbeaten, starting by defeating Nan Sexton of Allan's Curling Club, 14-4. Then Mrs. Whittam came up with a last-rock takeout in the key game to defeat Dorothy Fukuyama of Victoria, 9-8, before clinching it with an 11-4 win over Sybil Magnusson of Port Alberni.

Mrs. Fukuyama, who bested Mrs. Magnusson, 10-8, and Mrs. Sexton, 7-5, around her loss to the Island champion, finished second with a 2-1 record.

Mrs. Sexton's rink, substituting for Marg Brillinger's Esquimalt rink, which qualified for the Island final but had to give up its chance because of illness, was next with a 1-2 record. Her win was by 9-8 over Mrs. Magnusson.

ISLAND FINALISTS

Dagg and Harper became the first two of the four rinks which will represent the South in the Island final here Jan. 21 when they won their first two games in the eight-rink, double knockout competition.

Dagg (Ray Dagg, Jack Trueman, Barry Harvey) looked the sharpest of all in a day of patchy curling as he defeated Don Edi of Esquimalt, 15-8, and Harvey Thomson of Esquimalt, 13-4.

TWIN WIN

Harper (Harvey Hodge, Gary Merrett, Vern Kaspick) downed Iner Hemstad of Allan's, 13-8, then finished fast to polish off Bob Bell of Duncan, 12-8, in the other "A" semi-final.

HIGH SCHOOL CHAMPS

Armstrong (Gordie Paterson, Torrey Gillott, Dave Vyner, won the South Island high school championship in a playoff with two other Victoria area rinks and one rink from Duncan.

The Esquimalt students will now play a best-of-three Island final against the Northern winner here next weekend for the right to carry on to the Pacific Coast Curling Association final.

North Island Rinks Decided

COURTENAY—Rinks skipped by Dave Paterson and Gary Herbert of the Comox Valley Curling Club and Bill Hollingsworth and Harry Shyshka of the Nanaimo Curling Club will represent the North in the Vancouver Island zone men's curling final at Duncan on Jan. 21.

They made the first step on the road which leads to the Canadian final here Saturday by winning two games each in the double knockout competition between eight rinks.

Paterson (Sandy Sandberg, Brian Nichols, Keith Acorn) and Herbert (Grant Macdonald, Frank Coates, Ken Musket) made it unbeaten.

Paterson first defeated Shyshka, 9-6, then reached the "A" event final by outscoring Hollingsworth, 9-5. Herbert defeated Mike Grycan of Campbell River, 8-6, and Earl Ewart of Port Alberni, 6-5, in that order.

Hollingsworth opened with a 10-9 win over Harry Stirzaker of Port Alberni before losing to Paterson, then won his spot by trimming Grycan, 12-2, in the "B" semis. Grycan had reached the semis by defeating Jack Ross of Campbell River, who lost to Ewart in the first game in "A".

Shyshka defeated Stirzaker, 9-7, and Ewart, 7-6, in "B" event to become the fourth winner.

Luckless Macs Stay in Cellar

COFFEE MACS 59, WHITE SPOTS 74

VANCOUVER—Victoria's outlucked Coffee Macs lost another close one here Saturday night and remained in last place in the Inter-City Men's Basketball League when they were beaten by Vancouver White Spots, 74-59.

	GF	W	L	F	A	Pts

Victoria	5	1	4	345	391	2

Wasted was a standout performance by rookie Mike Lauvaas, who hit from all over the floor and played a strong game on the boards as he marked up a game high of 31 points.

FOURTH LOSS

Loss was the fourth in five league games for the Islanders, who have scored only 16 points fewer than they have allowed.

Last night, the difference same in the second quarter, the White Spots outscoring their rivals, 12-12 to take a 32-25 lead into the second half.

Both clubs scored 21 points in the third quarter with Ian Hunter stopping a Victoria comeback by getting eight of his 13 points. Coffee Macs pushed within three points in the last 10 minutes but could never get ahead.

Losers were handicapped by injuries which forced Ken Gregory to be under par on a gimpy ankle and resulted in Skip Ward missing most of the second half with bruised heels.

Coffee Macs play Vancouver IGA here this afternoon to complete their weekend schedule.

COFFEE MACS (59)—Ken Gregory 4, Jack Lask 5, Darrell Lorimer 13, John Lauvaas 31, Skip Ward 3, Drew Schroeder 2, John McKeachie, Mike Gallo, Ken Rowker 1.

Record Shotput

SAN FRANCISCO (AP)—Oregon's Neal Steinhauer shattered the world indoor shotput record with his second throw Saturday night, a 66-foot 6¾-inch toss in the All-American Games here.

After a 59-foot 10-inch effort on his first throw, the Oregonian heaved the 16-pound ball well past the 64-foot 11¾-inch mark set in 1962 by Gary Gubner of New York.

Victoria High Stays Unbeaten

Lord Byng built up a six point half-time lead and held on to defeat Oak Bay, 48-45, Saturday in an exciting exhibition high school boys exhibition game at Oak Bay High School.

Don Burrows sparked the Bays with 17 points but Byng refused to lose another close one to a Victoria team.

Tim Lockhart with 14 points led Lord Byng, who lost to Victoria High in overtime Friday night.

SECOND WIN

Victoria High made it a perfect weekend by downing Burnaby Central, 43-30, behind the 14 point performance of Ollie Moilanen.

Glen MacKenzie topped the losers with nine points.

ONE-SIDED WIN

In the first game of the evening, Courtenay High trounced Oak Bay, 54-30, in a girls game. Heather Witzel with 19 points and her sister Rose with 12 paced the win.

New Yacht Beats Gretel

SYDNEY, Australia (AP) — Dame Pattie, Australia's new 12-metre yacht, led all the way Saturday in beating Gretel by 110 yards in the first of a long series of trials to determine the challenger for the America's Cup held by the United States.

Dame Pattie was skippered by Jock Sturrock, who handled Gretel in her 4-1 loss to the American Weatherly off Newport, R.I., in 1962.

The revamped Gretel was skippered by Archie Robertson, who was the standby helmsman for Sturrock and a member of the afterguard in the races four years ago.

Bests Europe's Best

Nancy Back in Form: Nabs German Slalom

OBERSTAUFEN, Germany (UPI) — Europe's top women skiers gave way Saturday to an in-form Nancy Greene of Canada, who overcame a first run deficit to win the special slalom of the Staufen cup ladies ski races.

Miss Greene, 23, was trailing Switzerland's Fernande Bochatey and French world champion Annie Famose after the first heat, but she pulled out all the stops in the second heat to win by an aggregate one-tenth of a second.

EXPECTED BY EXPERTS

Local experts expressed little surprise over the Canadian girl's times of 42.38 and 37.15 seconds. They described her as one of the world's best slalom specialists and noted she posted the best first heat time in the world championships at Portillo, Chile, last summer, although a relatively bad second-leg time left her in seventh place in the standings.

In the previous year at Oberstaufen she also turned in the best time in her first run, but missed a gate in the second and was disqualified.

"I am terribly pleased over this win," Miss Greene said "especially after I have been followed by pretty bad luck."

She is a student at Notre Dame university at Nelson, British Columbia, and is only able to race in Europe for three weeks each year.

Miss Bochatey was fastest on Saturday's first run, with a time of 41.3 seconds, followed by Miss Famose in 41.40, and French Olympic champion Christine Beranger-Goittschel in 42.07. Miss Greene was fourth.

TERRIFIC SECOND RUN

On the second run, however, it was a different story. The Canadian girl swung through the gates at a terrific clip to clock 37.15S seconds, with Florence Steurer of France second in 37.93, Miss Goittschel in 37.99, and Miss Bochatey in 38.12.

Miss Greene's aggregate time of 79.33 seconds gave her the edge over Miss Bochatey, who clocked 79.43 and Miss Famose with 80.69.

One unlucky skier was Penny McCoy of Bishop, Calif., on her first trip to Europe as a member of the American team. She missed a gate and was disqualified.

Other American placings in Saturday's competition, which was held on a fast and excellent course, were 28th place to Sandra Stellworth of Boise, Idaho, and 33rd place to Susan Chaffee.

Injures Back

Forward Ike MacKay of Victoria O'Keefes will be lost to Pacific Coast Soccer League leaders for at least six weeks. MacKay suffered a broken vertebrae and had two others cracked in yesterday's game here against UBC team.

Small, Dugan Lead Scoring

	GP	W	L	T	F	A	Pts
Powell River	15	11	1	3	62	26	25
Nanaimo	13	7	1	5	49	19	19
Port Alberni	15	4	8	3	37	57	11

Al Small of Powell River and Arnie Dugan of Nanaimo top the Pacific Coast Amateur Hockey League scoring race with 18 points each.

Jim Peterson, one point behind the leaders, and Bud Dumont of Nanaimo lead the goal scorers with nine. Dugan and Pete Nuttall of Port Alberni each have 12 assists to lead the league.

Rugger Leaders Rough-Handled

	P	W	L	T	F	A	Pts
JBAA	11	6	3	1	140	68	17
Oak Bay	11	7	3	0	174	108	14
CFB	10	6	3	1	158	91	13

Uvic	10	2	6	1	70	132	5
Cowichan	10	0	7	0	52	111	0

Leaders in the Victoria Rugby Union's second division had their hands full yesterday in the two games played.

Leading James Bay Athletic Association was held to an 8-8 draw by fifth-place University of Victoria and second-place Oak Bay Wanderers were trounced, 11-0, by the Canadian Forces Base entry, now only one point behind the runners-up.

In an exhibition game between two first division clubs at University of Victoria, Wanderers outscored the host club, 11-5.

At Macdonald Park, Dave Goodman and Don McNamee scored trys for JBAA and Vince Callender kicked one convert. Dave Slater and Mel McDonald scored the trys for Uvic and Rick Pyke made good on one convert try.

At Colville Road, Bill Sorsdahl, Bob Price and Bert Berthiaume scored trys for CFB and Will Lennox kicked a convert.

Art Burgess led the Wanderers in the exhibition game by converting trys by Ken Wills and Paul Carnes and made a penalty kick. Don Manning went over for the University team and Dan Evans kicked the convert.

Shooting from Lip Costs Toe Dearly

MONTREAL (CP) — Toe Blake, coach of Montreal Canadiens of the National Hockey League, has been fined $200 by league president Clarence Campbell after a review of an incident in Detroit last Sunday night.

Late in the third period of Montreal's 4-1 loss to the Red Wings, Blake was ejected from the game by referee Vern Buffey.

After a meeting with Blake and Buffey Campbell said in a statement:

ABUSIVE LANGUAGE

"The facts are that Buffey imposed a bench penalty against Canadiens when Blake used abusive language in a loud voice in criticizing Buffey as play progressed for not calling a penalty against Detroit."

When play was about to resume following the imposition of the bench minor, Blake continued to criticize the referee in a loud voice and stood up on his players' bench with one foot on the boards, and was finally ejected by Buffey.

O'Keefes Remain Stainless As Thunderbirds Skunked

By ROBIN JEFFREY

For the University of British Columbia Thunderbirds, Saturday was a day of disappointment — like spending three weeks on an essay and getting a C, or $20 on a date and getting a handshake at the door.

Thuderbirds played some good soccer against Victoria O'Keefes at Macdonald Park. They made enough openings to get at least a tie. But O'Keefes were the better opportunists, and they came away with a 2-0 Pacific Coast Soccer League victory before 576 fans.

STILL UNBEATEN

The win maintained O'Keefes unbeaten streak this season and pushed them back to the top of the league, one point ahead of Vancouver Columbus, Columbus, however, plays Burnaby Villa today.

After a goal by Victoria's Ike MacKay was disallowed at the three-minute mark (MacKay had fouled a defender), UBC took control for much of the remainder of the half.

BERRY SHINES

Fullback Jim Berry, one of the best backs in the PCSL and certainly the most exciting, had three shots on O'Keefes' Barry Sadler in the next 15 minutes. He had Sadler beaten with a lob at 12 minutes, but the ball hit the bar and was cleared.

Sadler pushed a sizzler from Ash Valdal, a former Victorian, over the bar, and Dave Stothard had to clear a dribbler off the goal line with Sadler beaten.

MISSED BIG CHANCE

With the Victoria defenders in semi-permanent discomfort, the students missed their best chance of the match at 36 minutes.

Sadler and Hamilton looked at each other and hesitated on a through pass. Centre forward Kirby Carter nipped between them and directed a weak, sharp-angled shot at the gaping goal. But fullback Don McIntosh raced across to clear.

That close call had one result. Stothard moved to centrehalf and Hamilton went to right back. It was a happy switch for Victoria as Stothard went on to have his best game of the season and settle the shaky defence.

O'KEEFES BOUNCE BACK

From there, O'Keefes came back. Dunc McCaig replaced Ike MacKay on a wing (partly a defensive measure to mark Berry, the marauding fullback) and Jim Schulz missed a great chance when a cross from Bert Soutar put him alone in front of UBC goalie Bruce Ballam. Ballam pushed the shot out for a corner.

And it was Jim Menzies, O'Keefes' leading scorer, who got the go-ahead goal seconds before halftime.

BURST BY MENZIES

McCaig chipped the ball into the goalmouth, Peter Bratt headed it down, and although Ballam managed to get his fingers to the ball, Menzies burst through to slither it home from about eight yards.

It was his eighth goal of the season and came despite some close checking and special attention from UBC halfback Russ Hillman.

UBC had 15 shots to Victoria's 12 in the first half, but the clubs each had seven shots on goal.

After the interval, the Victoria team maintained the edge it gained in the last 10 minutes of the first half. O'Keefes had 12 shots (six on goal) to the students' eight (three on goal). But the tempo slowed and some of the first half excitement disappeared.

And it was the younger UBC team which seemed to tire, although it always looked capable of grabbing a tie.

But with about four minutes left, Schulz ended that possibility when he finished off quick passes between McCaig and Menzies by left-footing the ball past Ballam from 10 yards.

Over the match, Victoria had 14 corners to UBC's nine, and referee Jack Adams called 13 fouls against the Thunderbirds and eight against O'Keefes.

Victoria plays in Vancouver next weekend against Firefighters.

THUNDERBIRDS — Bruce Ballam, Jim Berry, Les Lendvoy, Bill Sinclair, Gene Rose, Russ Hillman; Jim Jamieson, Ash Valdal, Kirby Carter, Harvey Thom, John Newbold. Reserves: John Humphries, Harry Lendvoy, Keith Brookes, Joe Johnson.

City Soccermen Back in Action

Victoria and District Soccer League resumes play today after a two-week layoff and both divisions can expect leadership changes.

Hourigan Kickers, first division leaders, have drawn a bye this week, and Canadian Scottish could take over first with a victory over Luckies at Heywood Avenue Park.

Should Luckies hold Scottish to a draw or come up with an upset win then Red Lions, two points behind Kickers, could move into a share of the lead by defeating the improving Victoria West club at Bullen Park.

In the other first division games, Tally-Ho meets Navy at Naden and University Vikings play Gorge Molsons at upper Topaz Park, a change from Central Park.

The tight second division race features co-leaders Island Tug and University Vikings playing at the Gordon Head Campus.

London Boxing Club plays Gorge at upper Beacon Hill Park and Falcons and Sidney meet on the lower pitch in the other matches.

The scheduled Victoria West and Colony Lions match has been postponed due to wet grounds.

All games start at 2 p.m.

Grid Colts Given Edge

MIAMI, Fla. (A) — With Johnny Unitas healthy, the Baltimore Colts are favored to beat the Philadelphia Eagles by a touchdown today in the National Football League's Pro Playoff Bowl.

In good passing form in Miami workouts, the veteran Unitas appeared to have shaken off the effects of a sore shoulder incurred in a Nov. 13 game with Atlanta and rib bruises inflicted by Green Bay Dec. 10.

With Unitas as the top drawing card, the game which has broken attendance records four years in a row, could be a sell-out for the first time in the 72,000-seat Orange Bowl. It came close last year when 65,500 watched Baltimore beat Dallas 35-3.

Minor Soccer Washed Out

Rain forced postponement of most of Saturday's games in the Lower Island Juvenile Soccer League.

Results of games played:

Division III — Trafalgar Legion 7, Lakehill 0; Gorge 7, Esquimalt Meat Market 0.

Division IV — University Realty 6, Gorge FC 3; View Royal 6, Wayte's Grocery 2; Lakehill 5, Evening Optimists 1; Boys Club 3, Peninsula Flyers 0.

Division V—Gorge FC 2, Gordon Head Reds 0; Boys Club 6, Eagles 0.

Mother, the Church Is Burning

By KLAUS MUENTER

DUNCAN — Many suns have risen behind rugged Mount Tzouhalem and many moons have reflected their light in the bays around Duncan since Mrs. Joseph Elliott was born as Mary Theresa Canute Lemo, March 20, 1889.

In the small and clean cottage on the Somenos reserve she shares with her husband Joseph Elliott, she remembers those many bygone years with pride, humor and some sadness.

The gutteral sound of the Cowichan native tongue becomes a soft flow when she speaks to her husband.

She recalls her grandfather as a handsome man who delivered merchandise in a stone boat and eventually had to give up his general store near St. Ann's Church, because as a friend of women he had too many charge accounts, which "melted with the ice in the spring."

She was born at Comiaken near the historic stone church which had been built a few decades before by Catholic missionary Peter Rondeault. Mrs. Elliott grew up on her father's farm.

Visitors to her parents' house were amazed to see the little girl standing on a stool and washing dishes.

They told her mother it was not right to make a little girl work like that, but her mother replied "when they are young is the time to teach them."

A strict family code forbade the girl to play with other children and when her parents had to go on a trip she was left with older friends of the family.

For hours she sat and listened to the tales of the old people. Stories of happiness and hardship which befell her tribe became meaningful.

She heard of Cowichan Indians who were taken prisoners of war by Haida warriors but managed to escape from the Queen Charlotte Islands, and after many privations eventually returned to their homes.

She learned that one of her ancestors, Classeston, became chief of the Cowichan Indians after he was recognized by Sir James Douglas as a wise man.

The governor and his party in the early 50s had landed at Fulford Harbor on Salt Spring Island where a large group of Indians was camping.

None of the Indians came forward to answer Douglas' question on what they were doing until Classeston spoke up.

Mrs. Elliott said he was the first Cowichan Indian to be recognized as chief by the government, and by the Indian people as well.

Classeston was eventually married by Father Rondeault, who had urged him to give up his other nine wives, most of whom had born him children.

The old woman vividly recalls another story she heard from her mother Josephine.

Coast Indians had gathered at Fort Victoria but were ordered to return to their homes.

They were provided with food and sent on their way.

On one of the islands a group rested and ate, but Josephine's family, on their way back to Port Gamble, Washington, refused, and escaped as only survivors.

The others died of food poisoning.

Mrs. Elliott said her mother as a small girl was abducted by her grandfather Scooththeleam, and taken back by canoe from her birthplace at Port Gamble to Klem Klem Alutz in the Cowichan Valley.

She was reared by friends on Salt Spring Island and when reaching womanhood, she returned to the Cowichan tribe which conducted a mask dance to protect her from evil and misconduct.

One of the Cowichan Indians, Jean Baptiste, reckoned Josephine would make a good wife for his son, and Mrs. Elliott was the first child born to the young couple.

Much of his work as chief, Baptiste had to delegate to Joe Calkmayel because he was too busy with his farm.

One episode of her childhood days still stands out crisp and clear because of its ironic tragedy.

One of her smaller brothers was badly injured in a fall out of a maple tree.

A medicine man was called and the little girl was told to leave the house while the Indian doctor performed his rituals.

She gazed over her father's farm and froze when she noticed flames shooting out of the steeple of St. Ann's Church.

She ran back to the house to tell her parents but was told to stay away while the medicine man worked on her injured brother.

Too small to protest, and used to strict discipline, she obeyed. The church burned to the ground.

Her brother John died of internal injuries.

As she grew up her father's farm, which produced fine horses, cattle, hogs, sheep and poultry, she became noted as a maker of good butter. She finally decided to work for white people in nearby Duncan.

When she married Willy Joe Sensamaine, her father gave her the horse she had cared for since it had been a foal, and along with it he gave her a rubber-wheeled buggy and a new harness.

Her husband died in 1928 and her daughter Angelina passed away three years ago. She married her present husband, Joseph Elliott, in 1939.

Fair Treatment For Tough Trade

NANAIMO — "Fair Treatment on a two-way street." That is the essence of aims of the Western Independent Log Haulers. It was put into words by secretary-treasurer Tom Fisher, in town for the first annual convention of the log haulers.

The association was born at Lake Cowichan Dec. 10, 1965.

The group had a charter by Feb. 4, and the next day members had their first regular meeting.

ALL SIZES

The association consists of log haulers from the Island and mainland inlets, and has members with only one unit to members with as many as 16.

Two such men are president Don Braithwaite, and the secretary-treasurer.

YOUNG DRIVER

Director Norm MacKenzie started when he was 11 years old, and had to have special permission to drive his first truck.

Today he looks as if he doesn't need to have a truck to get logs to market, he's a big man.

Injuries sustained in an airplane crash kept Mr. Braithwaite from the first day of the convention. But against doctor's orders to take it easy for a few weeks, he appeared at the convention Saturday, and was met with an ovation from member.

The reason that they formed was to have a representative body to meet with government bodies, and to co-operate among themselves.

Efficiency within the association and the logging industry as a whole is their objective.

The group has been accepted throughout the logging industry, from those with whom they have contracts, to those who supply their equipment.

BIG INDUSTRY

"It should have been formed 10 years ago," said Mr. Braithwaite.

In only a year, they have accumulated 100 active members, some 15 associate members, and represent a collective million-dollar industry.

COMPETITION

Although the members compete with each other, they hope to develop a co-operative competitive attitude, where fair play in business is the rule.

Their convention was indicative of their collective image, big and worthwhile.

WIVES AWAITED

Equipment was parked outside of the Tally-Ho Motel where the convention was held, and between the 12 functions, members walked about and looked and looked at the displays.

Members shattered the usual idea of a convention — they brought their wives.

Indications are that Nanaimo will be the site of their next convention.

Sod Turns House Goes

This house had to go, as first step toward preparation of site for construction of new $550,000 grocery store near Duncan Shopping Plaza. Sod was turned by company officials. Home of Paul Antoine was moved to another site on Cowichan Indian Reserve. — (Klaus Muenter)

Jury Can't Diagnose Plane Crash Cause

The crash killed Cpl. Jean Roy.

The inquest jury was unable to reach a conclusion on what went wrong with the small basement model.

There were two RCAF flight lieutenants on the inquest jury.

The jury said "we list the cause of the crash as unknown on the basis of evidence presented."

The plane was built by the young man who was stationed at CFB, Comox, at the time of his death.

Evidence revealed he had about 25 hours flying time to his credit; and a flying instructor termed his as a person who would be very careful in his flying habits.

Despite reports from eye witnesses at the time of the crash which indicated a wing fell away from the plane, there was no evidence introduced at the inquest to substantiate this suggestion.

In the opinion of two witnesses there was no evidence that the wing had torn loose.

D.O.T. officials who did not appear at the inquest, submitted a report which showed the aircraft carried a certificate of registration, flight permit, pilot held a licence and qualifications for the type of aircraft, it was loaded within the allowable weight limit.

No evidence was found of any malfunction of the engine or flight controls prior to the accident. There was evidence the aircraft collided with trees.

A medical report indicated the pilot suffered compound fractures, laceration of right lung, contusions to both lungs, partial rupture of diaphragm and both kidneys, multiple lacerations and contusions.

It added there was no evidence of any pre-existing disease which might have contributed to the accident.

From questions asked by the two RCAF jury members and answers given by another RCAF witness the theory was partially advanced that the plane had gone into a stall and in bringing it out the pilot had overcorrected.

Firemen Go Higher

PARKSVILLE—Annual report of Parksville Volunteer Fire Department, submitted to the village council by Fire Chief W. G. Wheeler, showed a very active year highlighted by the acquiring of a new bigger fire truck with modern ladders and equipment.

This meets the demand of larger buildings such as apartment blocks in the village. It brought the strength of the department up to two trucks and an inhalator and life saving unit.

During the year calls had been received for two chimney fires, three grass or brush fires, one truck, one tractor, two cars in a building, one peat fire, one oil stove and one run-away truck.

Classes Will Be Trimmed For Nanaimo Educators

By ARNOLD OLSON

NANAIMO — In two years, no primary grade class in this school district will have more than 25 pupils, a school trustee commented Saturday.

"It's just a matter of building classrooms," said Joe Shook. He gave his opinion following a speech by a teaching official here.

Charles Ovans, secretary of the B.C. Teachers Federation, outlined his view of education needs now and for the future.

● But Trustee Shook said the opinions did not apply to Nanaimo.

He said much more space will be made available in the district because of recent building of schools and school additions. This will mean smaller primary classes.

Purchase of portable classrooms will facilitate the easing of classroom burdens.

Mr. Shook, referring to Ovans' talk, said "he put too much of the load on the teachers."

● Mr. Ovans had proposed shaping of the child who comes from a poor social area, or a broken home. "Is it possible?" Mr. Shook asked.

Teachers and trustees both were unimpressed with the catchphrase "learning can be fun."

Said Trustee Shook, "you wouldn't be developing the whole person.

"If someone isn't good at something, there is no reason why he shouldn't try — the student should learn this too," he explained.

● A teacher expressed the opinion that one thing seems to be missing in the teaching program . . . the union of one subject with another.

Mr. Shook also felt that the adult society should do some learning. "They should learn first, not to drive one beyond his capabilities," he said.

Residents Want Hearing

CAMPBELL RIVER — Residents of Gowlland Harbor on Quadra Island have asked the provincial government for a hearing before granting log storage leases to Elk Falls Co.

However, Recreation Minister Kenneth Kiernan already has said the harbor is the most economical storage spot for the company's Duncan Bay mill.

O'Brien Now Deputy Boss

PARKSVILLE — Committees for the year were appointed by village chairman E. C. Irving at the first council meeting of 1967, following the welcoming of two newly elected councillors, Margaret Haworth and Robert V. Doughty.

The first act of the chairman was to appoint Coun. J. C. O'Brien as deputy chairman for the year.

Committees were appointed; chairmen are: Building permits and subdivisions, Coun. O'Brien; finance, Coun. E. J. Tucker; parks, Coun. Haworth; fire and protection, Coun. Tucker; public works, Coun. Doughty; sanitation, Coun. Doughty.

HEALTH BOARD

Mrs. Haworth was appointed as village representative to the Union Board of Health and also to Parksville Recreation Commission. Mr. Tucker was appointed as representative to the Vancouver Island Regional Library and Mr. Doughty as representative to Parksville Pageant Committee.

SUBDIVISION

Municipal clerk W. J. Cuthbert was appointed as approving officer for subdivision plans and Mrs. Patricia Smith, office assistant, was appointed as census enumerator for the newly incorporated area of the village.

Municipal maintenance foreman W. S. Smith was appointed poundkeeper for the year and W. G. Wheeler confirmed as fire chief, building and licence inspector and dog licence fee collector.

TELEPHONE

A letter was received from the B.C. Telephone Company in reply to a former request made by the council, stating that an emergency telephone is to be installed near the approach of the summit of the Alberni highway on a trial basis.

It was pointed out that telephones installed in isolated areas have been the target of vandals in the past.

MEETING

It was decided to arrange an early meeting with G. N. Worsley of Victoria, town planner, also with the representative of an engineering firm, to discuss waterworks development.

Miss Nanaimo Must Pay Way

NANAIMO — The Miss Nanaimo crown will not sit lightly on the head of a poor girl.

One member of city council replied to criticism of the city for not providing more money to finance the queen's trips to official functions in other cities.

The alderman said winners of the Miss Nanaimo crown must realize there will be expenses to be met by the girl herself.

He commented "This is part of being in the public eye. As alderman, I spend more than I get."

Gloria Dalla-Lavia, Nu Phi Mu president, said that she felt that the blame attached to Nanaimo City Council was not timely.

"We didn't go there (meeting of Nanaimo Junior Chamber of Commerce) to call city council down. It should be remembered that this information come out as a result of a meeting with the organization.

"A formal letter of application has been drafted, asking council for help, and is ready to be sent," she added.

She explained that the Jaycees just happened to be the first group they had asked for help. The council had come into "unfortunate criticism."

Retarded Care Causes Worry

PORT ALBERNI — Dennis Sheppard, public trustee for the province of British Columbia, will be guest speaker at the annual meeting of the Alberni Valley Association for Retarded Children Jan. 17.

Mr. Sheppard will continue the work of his office, and will discuss the law as it applies to children coming of legal age, with particular reference to retarded children.

An informal discussion period will follow.

CONCERN

Parents are frequently concerned about protecting a retarded youngster's interest in their estates, providing for them by special requests in their wills, and such as other areas as legal responsibility for retardates over 21.

All these are matters with which Mr. Sheppard is specially trained to deal.

OFFICERS

Election of officers for the coming year will also be held during the evening, and the annual report of the local association will be presented.

Bo-Peep Kindergarten for preschoolers and the Arrowsmith Workshop for young adult retardates are both operated solely through the efforts of the Alberni association.

PUBLIC

The annual meeting will be held at 8 p.m. in the Retarded Children's Association building at 1411 Eighth Avenue North, and is open to the public, as well as to all interested parents, friends and members of the association.

When Love Begins to Sicken and Decay . . .

Members of Duncan Drama Club dramatically protested lack of facilities by staging funeral procession through downtown Duncan Saturday afternoon. Long line of cars moved slowly, in solemn memory of community effort that died because there was no space for it. Club was going to present Bus Stop, but comedy has been cancelled. — (Marie Cadorette)

Police Criticize Working Couples

Dog Marooners Hit in Saanich

By JOHN MATTERS

Husbands and wives who work during the day, leaving their pooches on the prowl, were condemned Friday by Police Chief W. A. Pearson of Saanich.

Their animals are the source of many of the complaints about dogs menacing people, animals and private property, he said.

Chief Pearson said Saanich's poundkeepers, who are under his jurisdiction, are bearing down heavily on the dog problem.

EIGHT MORE

Eight charges against people for leaving their dogs loose have gone to trial in the past week and eight more summonses were served Friday, he said.

"We will keep on serving summonses until the dogs are brought under control," added the chief. "We have had just too many complaints of dogs destroying gardens, chasing cats and even attacking people."

Chief Pearson said many of the problems seem to lie with couples who "blithely take off" for work during the day, leaving their dogs loose.

"I like dogs myself but if people acquire a dog they should see that it's taken care of, whether or not they are at home all day."

NEVER TRIED

He said policemen and the poundkeepers are doing their best to please everyone but the dog problem in recent weeks has made that objective difficult.

Chief Pearson said officials have never tried to lure dogs off private property in order to impound them, nor have they trespassed on private property to catch a dog for impounding.

He said that, even if the poundkeeper follows a stray dog 10 miles to its home, he cannot impound it after it crosses the property line.

Before such a stray could be impounded, the animal would have to be on public property, explained the chief.

Plenty to Do For Young Says Chief

The social worker who said Victoria youth don't have enough outlets for their energies "should go and stick his head in a bucket of water."

The comment came Friday from Police Chief W. A. Pearson of Saanich after he read social worker Robert Leach's suggestion that more money should go toward prevention instead of prosecution of delinquency in the Greater Victoria area.

MORE THAN MOST

"This area has more outlets for young people than most of its size," said the police chief. "The social worker has not explained the inane and asinine behavior of some of the young punks."

Police Chief Pearson said what riled him most was the avalanche of complaints about damage to Christmas lighting and decorations.

He said that looking at the area from Mount Tolmie it appeared that more residents than ever had gone to a lot of trouble to enhance the spirit of peace and goodwill during the holiday season.

Saanich police received an average of five or six calls about vandalism each night the decorations were on display.

HE AGREES

"I go right along with Mayor Stephen in condemning teenagers who conscientiously destroy property," said Chief Pearson.

He said Christmas lighting displays were stolen as well as damaged.

REDUCTION SOUGHT

Chief Pearson added that he felt the time had come to reduce the age which defines a juvenile from 18 to 16.

"We give a 18-year-old the right to drive a car, one of the greatest killers man has invented, but we do not think he's mature enough to face a charge in the same court as an adult."

Man Now Fit To Face Court

A man accused of shooting up the Sidney RCMP station last Thanksgiving has been transferred to jail in Victoria to await trial on three counts of attempted murder.

Kenneth Wayne Ingram, 25, of 1986 John Street, Sidney, was transferred from Riverview mental hospital following an order from the provincial cabinet declaring him fit to stand trial.

He had been declared mentally unfit for trial when he appeared before Magistrate D. G. Ashby shortly after the incident.

Trial date has not been set.

ANSWERED KNOCK

The shooting occurred Thanksgiving Sunday about 6 a.m. when Sidney jail guard William McAuley answered a knock on the door to find a man brandishing a gun.

He slammed the door in the man's face, but the window was smashed in, and Mr. McAuley suffered a bullet wound in his left side.

The gunman broke into the premises, forced Mr. McAuley into a cell with three prisoners, shot out the fluorescent lights and threatened inmates of the cell.

Police of three forces were alerted and sped to the scene. Closing in on the station, one policeman narrowly escaped death when a .22 slug passed through his hat.

The officers entered the building and freed the prisoners.

A man was found in the basement with a rifle.

Apart from the three attempted murder charges, Ingram faces one count of breaking, entering and theft.

Water Board Seeking Fire Shield

By A. H. MURPHY
City Hall Reporter

Greater Victoria has a 34,000-acre, $25,000,000 timber resource in its water district and steps will be taken early this year to see that it is protected from fire.

Commissioner Ronald Upward said Friday he will be arranging talks with officials of the B.C. Forest Service to bring the huge Greater Victoria Water District tract under the protection of the provincial government.

The action was authorized at a recent meeting of the water district at which members were told that in 1966, for the first time, the forest service presented the district with a bill for extinguishing two small fires.

Up to 1966 the forest service absorbed the cost of extinguishing fires on district property which were caused by other than district personnel or operations.

CHANGE ASKED

However, the service notified the board that it no longer considered this fair and asked for a change of policy. At the same time it presented a bill for $2,300.

Mr. Upward told water board members that if a small amendment was made in the act governing forest service the district could come under the regular protection offered by the province at a cost of about six cents an acre.

NOMINAL COST

So, for $2,000 a year—really a nominal cost—the district would be safeguarded.

The alternative, Mr. Upward said, would be for the water district to set up its own service.

Not only would this be costly but the district did not have the personnel to staff such a service.

Total fire cost over the 20-odd years the district had been in operation had only been about $25,000, Mr. Upward said.

The water board agreed that the bill should be paid and that the commissioner should open talks with officials of the B.C. Forest Service to bring the area under regular provincial protection.

Critics Hit

Rescue Action Defended

By WAYNE THOMAS

Reports criticizing the crew of a ferry in Monday's double drowning came under fire from several sources Friday.

Earlier reports claimed the crew of the ferry Queen of Burnaby had not done everything possible to save George Sauriol, about 45, and Mrs. Velma Moore, 42, both of Nanaimo.

One caller was a woman who telephoned The Daily Colonist Friday afternoon.

CRUISER SANK

She said she was a government employee from Nanaimo and was a passenger on the ferry Monday evening when the 24-foot cruiser Birdie Hill III sank in high seas and 40-mile-an-hour winds.

The woman insisted she remain anonymous.

The woman said she was "sickened and disgusted" by reports stating the ferry crew had not done everything possible to save the couple.

DIFFICULT CONDITIONS

R. B. Worley, assistant general manager of B.C. Ferries, said Friday master mariners and top officials had told him Capt. Thomas Raynor handled his ship in a professional and seamanlike manner under difficult conditions.

One of those commending Capt. Raynor was Captain C. F. Allitree, Vancouver deputy port warden.

He said there was a Force 7 wind, described on the Beaufort scale as a near-gale, with wind velocity of 28 to 33 knots.

HAZARDOUS TASK

A big ferry is difficult to manoeuvre under such conditions and Capt. Allitree felt it would have been extremely hazardous to launch a lifeboat.

Capt. J. C. Barbour, chief rescue officer of the Canadian Coast Guard, said, "We are aware of the criticisms of some of the passengers on the conduct of the rescue attempt.

"However, their views are not necessarily those of experienced master mariners, who know the hazards involved."

Ontario Boosts Spirits Price

TORONTO (CP) —The Liquor Control Board of Ontario has announced an increase in the price of beer, liquor and wines to meet a one-per-cent boost in the federal sales tax. Liquor now selling for $4.60 will become $4.62 while beer will be increased by one or two cents a dozen and 13 cents on a half-barrel of draught beer effective Jan. 9.

POLICEMAN of the GAY NINETIES

By VIVIENNE CHADWICK

William Charles Shawyer, English born but a Victorian since the year 1892, did single-handed, in those years before the turn of the century, a job which today would probably involve two armed men and an armoured car.

He was on police duty with the Royal Marines, HMS Royal Arthur, based at Esquimalt, and once a month for four years he rode escort on a horse-drawn hack which picked up the pay for the fleet at the Canadian Bank of Commerce on Government Street, and delivered it to the Navy Yard.

"The money was nearly all in sovereigns," said Mr. Shawyer, "bag of them, almost more than I could carry."

He wore no sidearms except a bayonet, and never once was an attempt made to rob the hack. One wonders just how far he would get currently, now that law and order has come to Fort Victoria, on the same sort of assignment . . .

William Shawyer's family lived in Portsmouth, where his father was a farmer, and he was one of 10 children. He wasn't a dyed-in-the-wool sailor, he says, or even a policeman, but joining the navy seemed a good way to get to the new world, and this was what he wanted.

He remembers well the early days in Victoria. His monthly rides with hack driver Winters, who was well-known locally for years, so that his name may still be familiar to oldtimers, were more uncomfortable than dangerous, often windy and bitterly cold, with the mud on the city streets ankle deep, and the wooden sidewalks not much better.

However, that isn't the sort of thing which bothers the youthful pioneer. The town was wide open, with Delmonico's, on Government, between Yates and Johnson, and the Trilby on Broad, he recalls, offering music, dancing, and free cheese and crackers with every 5c schooner of beer! Twenty-four hours a day, too!

"You could walk into town from Esquimalt with 50c," muses Mr. Shawyer happily, "have several beers, take a streetcar back, and still wind up with a dime left over!"

This too has changed.

The ex-navy man is one of the few remaining people who was closely involved with the Point Ellice bridge disaster. He wasn't aboard the tram which went down when the bridge gave way, but he was instrumental in saving the lives of three people who might otherwise have been lost.

He was standing on a corner on Store Street when the streetcar went by, packed to the steps. Beside him was a friend, a woman, with two young children, a boy and a girl. A gentleman on the platform of the car reached down and extended a hand to the woman and helped her up, trying to make room for her. She turned for her children, but instead of giving them a hand, Mr. Shawyer restrained them firmly.

"No," he said, "it's too much of a crush for youngsters. Let them wait for the next one."

Their mother pondered briefly whether or not she should permit the two to come along alone — and swiftly decided against it. She descended to the street once more . . . and five minutes later the overloaded car was at the bottom of the water.

When Mr. Shawyer's first four years at the Navy Yard were up, he put in for a discharge. He had long yearned to try his luck up in the mines of the Klondike, that Mecca for so many adventurous souls in the 1800s, but just at the wrong moment there came a shift in the navy's arrangements. The Emperiuse replaced the Royal Arthur as flagship, he said, his request for a discharge was refused, and he was transferred to HMS Satellite, soon to leave Canadian waters for England.

It was a run which was to take six solid months. The vessel was no sooner well out into the straits than a gale came up off Cape Flattery. The Satellite put into Pedder Bay, and was stuck there for two days. It was December. They beat down the coast and arrived off Acapulco the day before Christmas. On the 25th, officers and crew were all set to celebrate when another gale struck, and as the roadstead at Acapulco is no place to sit at anchor under adverse weather conditions, they must put to sea to ride out the storm.

"We lost our jib boom," recalled Mr. Shawyer, and added sorrowfully, "but that wasn't the worst. All our Christmas dinner broke loose and was floating around the deck!"

Mile by mile they made the long sea trek, stopping at many ports for fuel and provisions, and delayed by further storms. One by one Coquimbo, Robinson Crusoe's Island, Magellan, Rio, and Monte Video were left behind, and at long last, on June 6, they arrived at Plymouth.

Young Shawyer hadn't been ashore once on the whole voyage, he said, so now he was glad to get three months leave. This was the year of Queen Victoria's diamond jubilee, and the Naval Review at Spithead was something to remember.

But he had had enough of navy life, and when his discharge finally came through he returned to Victoria and went to work for the Bullen Company, who were building Esquimalt's first marine ways. He also worked on the first ways in Vancouver. Then along came a prospector friend, and once more William began to think about mining.

The two went off to the Kootenays together, where there were road and trail building jobs, and plenty of work with various mining companies. One of these jobs, as far as William was concerned, came to an abrupt end. It was between shifts, he was headed down a steep trail leading from one mine site to another, when it came on to snow heavily.

In 20 minutes four inches of fresh snow blotted out a trail already ice-packed. Suddenly the young miner's feet shot out from under him. He continued on down the mountain side in a sitting position and at a vastly increased speed, and when he finally brought up in a drift a good quarter of a mile further on, he was minus the seat of his trousers and everything underneath, including his skin.

Whether or not there was further damage, or weather darkness came on and delayed his return, he didn't say, but when he failed to show up at work, men were sent looking for him. His superiors were not pleased. Perhaps they thought miners shouldn't go tobogganing in their spare time. In any event, William hastily quit — to avoid being fired!

"And you know what?" he mused. "That was the same day as Queen Victoria's funeral!"

His next job was with the company which was building an aerial tramway for bringing the ore from a mine high up on Mt. Sicker down to Somenos Lake. When it was finished, he ran the tramway, but at the end of 18 months he decided on a visit home. He went to work in the mines near Corsham, spent several years there and in South Wales, and in the meantime married and began to raise a family.

But it was always in his mind to return to Victoria, and the day came when he booked their passage. But while waiting for the sailing date, they visited at the family home in Portsmouth — and illness there unexpectedly changed his plans. Some of his sister's youngsters came down with measles, and William, fearful for his own children and wary of the possibility of quarantine, cancelled their bookings and came out in a hurry, on an earlier ship.

It was as well. The cancelled passage had been on the Titanic. She went down the day the Shawyers arrived in Victoria.

On the next five years William's comments are somewhat curt. He went to work under Chief Langley for the Victoria Police. "I started at $3 a day," he remarked, still annoyed at a long past insult, "and after five years the pay was reduced to $2.50. I quit!"

He bought a small holding in North Saanich, not far from the Seventeen Mile House, and went in for mixed farming, with occasional work at the local fish hatchery and for the CNR.

By this time schooling for his children was a problem. In fact there was no school at all, and 10 were needed before the authorities would provide a teacher. William and his wife had three, there were three or four more in the vicinity, and at last three more had to be "borrowed" from the Children's Aid Society to make up the necessary number. Then Mr. Shawyer canvassed the district, got enough funds together for lumber, and he and his contemporaries put up a one-roomed schoolhouse.

That was all a long time ago. Today, a widower and a grandfather, William lives with his eldest daughter, Mrs. Vera Rawlinson, at 2567 Quadra Street, with his other two, Mrs. Lenora Hewlett, and William Shawyer, Jr., at 3856 Sexton and 20 Menzies, respectively.

William, Sr., doesn't look his 91 years. He is very tall and slender, with fine dark eyes which Mrs. Rawlinson, for one, has certainly inherited. Her father is very active, she says, and out every day. One rather gets the impression that, though the family try to look after him, it isn't always easy. After all, he probably feels that he's been looking after himself for some considerable time now, and is still capable of making a job of it!

There are not very many people of the modern generation know that Victoria had two stockades fronting on Government Street. We have now arrived in our wanderings at the approximate position of the southern edge of this second stockade which surrounded the building erected for James Douglas in the early days of his governorship.

REAL ESTATE, INSURANCE and COAL

By AINSLIE HELMCKEN

The very valuable Anderson's journals places the stockade at about 75 to 100 paces from the northeast corner of Fort Victoria. This I have paced off and feel this to be the approximate position.

During this period James Douglas' home across James Bay was being completed so the stockaded building would serve for governmental use rather than residential.

It would be typical of this gentleman to effect a separation of the functions as governor from that of the office he was vacating with the Hudson's Bay Company. For these reasons I believe he chose this location rather than the position shown on the city plan, published with one of my previous articles, at the corner opposite the Bastion.

The same reasoning prompts me to disagree with the conclusions of some historians as to the location of the landing point originally made by Douglas. If you will permit me to digress from our walk for a few moments I would like to talk to you about this matter.

There can be little doubt that Douglas was a pretty level-headed man. He had confidence in his own judgment and appraisal of procedure. History does not disclose any foolhardy or rash endeavors into the unknown, with the possible exception of a clash with a native at Fort St. James.

The thorough report made to his superiors regarding the lands surrounding what was later to become Fort Victoria lead me to believe he never did land at Clover Point and I think that greater powers were just having a little joke with us when we tried to tamper with history by attempting to land the Beaver crew during the 1966 celebrations.

No man with the wisdom of Douglas would have attempted to land at this point without first having carried out further exploration.

Preceding his retirement, James Douglas was accorded many honors by his fellow colonists. Most of the addresses tendered him have been bound in a little volume. Three of the addresses give three different locations for his landing point. Nowhere can I find anything in the replies which indicated the exact site. It is my belief that he made his landing within the limits of the harbor, possibly Laurel Point.

Having got that off my chest and with my right ear burning, as well as hearing the remarks of those who aver that I don't know what I'm talking about, let's get on with our stroll about town.

For the sake of continuity it is necessary for me to mention again the names of some gentlemen to whom I have referred in a previous series.

Richard Hall, senior partner in the firm of Hall and Goepel, is the gentleman we are visiting for the moment. Also occupying this office is the firm of Hall and Walker, Ltd., and we will be speaking of Walter Walker in a little while.

Richard Hall was born in Grass Valley, California, in 1853, and arrived here at the age of six, or in his seventh year. He received his education here and the first job he had was as a purser on a ship plying between Victoria and mainland ports. During the gold rush days to the Cassiar he was purser on a stern-wheeler plying the Stikine River with supplies for the miners.

Evidently he made some money somewhere for he became associated with Henry Denny in the drygoods business on his return to Victoria, and then entered the insurance business as manager of that department for the well-respected Robert Ward and Co. In his upward climb he set up his own insurance agency with Liverpool, London and Globe Insurance company as well as opening a retail and wholesale coal dealership.

So well did his business develop that he took a partner into the business. This was W. J. Goepel and he remained in the partnership until he was appointed to the provincial civil service in the later '90s. Mr. Goepel had a distinguished career as we will see shortly.

With the volume of business which he had developed it was necessary to find another partner for the fuel business and in Walter Walker he found just that man. So the firm of Hall and Walker was founded in 1899.

Mr. Hall reserved the insurance business for himself and had J. E. Kinsman, a relative of Mrs. Hall, as his associate.

It is typical of the era that a businessman of Mr. Hall's standing should take a very active part in the political life of both the province and the city.

For many years he had been a staunch supporter of the Conservative cause but changed his allegiance to the Liberals. It was as a Liberal he was elected to the provincial legislature in 1889 as a member for Victoria. He was re-elected in two succeeding elections but went down to defeat in the Dick McBride landslide of 1907.

His baptism of political experience had been as a school trustee during 1890 and 1891. Having been defeated for the House he turned to civic affairs in 1908 and was elected as an alderman.

A man of excellent repute and standing in the province, he was chosen by the Dominion government to head the local inquiry into the fisheries business in 1905 and his findings carried much weight with Ottawa in the preparation of new regulation.

Mr. Hall was also one of the shareholders in the Victoria Sealing Company with Capt. William Grant, in fact was president of this at one time. But more about this later on.

In 1887 he was married to Miss Louisa Kinsman and of the marriage there were six children. The sole survivor is Mrs. Kathleen Dunsmuir.

While not actually a part of the scene of 1908 it would not be appropriate to pass by the name of Mr. W. J. Goepel, the first partner. After leaving the partnership in 1899 he became successively inspector of offices for the department of finance, deputy chief commissioner of lands and works, and finally deputy minister of finance. For some years he lived in Nelson.

Mr. Goepel died in Victoria, where he continued to live after his retirement, in 1936, at the age of 78 years. A most respected man. Could one say more?

Walter Walker was a good Scot. Born in Scotland in 1847, he came to Victoria in 1875 and entered the shipbuilding and repair business. After some years he saw opportunity to enter the coal business at the retail level and this he did in 1888 with considerable success. After the retirement of Mr. Goepel there appeared to be advantages for the amalgamation of the coal businesses operated by Richard Hall and Walter Walker respectively and this was concluded in 1899, under the firm name of Hall and Walker. This firm continued as such until shortly after the death of Mr. Hall in 1918 when the families decided to go their separate ways. The firms of Richard Hall and Sons Ltd. and Walter Walker and Sons Ltd., which are now 85 and 79 years old respectively, have been in continuous operation under family sponsorship.

Now to return to Mr. Walker. Here again was another public-spirited gentleman. Active in many charitable organizations, he was also an elder of the First Presbyterian Church. He entered civic politics and was an alderman during 1916 to 1918.

He too was interested in the sealing business, as many a merchant was at that time, and with others owned the steam schooner Mischief.

In the Walter Walker business,

Everybody who has traversed the Rocky Mountains by CPR remembers a brief stop at The Great Divide. There at the highest point in the Kicking Horse Pass one sees waters from a common source drain in two directions, one to the Pacific on the west, the other to the Atlantic far to the east.

That pool alongside the railway, charmingly landscaped for the delectation of tourists, is more than an interesting natural phenomenon. As a single point in a rugged skyline boundary between two great Canadian provinces, Alberta and British Columbia, it has important geographical and political significance.

ALAN CAMPBELL SURVEYED THE ROCKY MOUNTAIN BOUNDARY BETWEEN ALBERTA and BRITISH COLUMBIA

By C. Norman Senior

Locating the exact position of that mountain peak border was a tremendous undertaking carried out half a century ago by a Boundary Commission. The man who knows most about it, who spent 12 years on the project, and who almost literally "climbed every mountain, forded every stream," between the United States border and the point where the inter-provincial boundary leaves the mountain chain to follow the 120th meridian northward, is now living in quiet retirement at 1128 Dallas Road in Victoria.

He is Alan J. Campbell, former chief topographer for British Columbia. In the technical sense he retired from the provincial government service about 25 years ago, but so valuable is his knowledge of British Columbia's mountain terrain that he went right on toiling out field parties for the surveys branch for long years afterwards.

Colleagues say no man living knows more about the Rocky Mountains and the mountains of British Columbia than A.J., as they habitually call him. The surveys that he has conducted cover almost every part of the province.

In locating, marking and mapping the Alberta-British Columbia boundary in the 12 years from 1913 to 1924 the surveyors used a method not long previously introduced into this country by the famous Dr. Edward G. D. Deville, surveyor-general of Canada. It is known as photographical surveying and although the system was first employed in other countries the Alberta-British Columbia boundary survey stands as unquestionably the most comprehensive project to which it has ever been applied. A serpentine line whose extremities lie 350 miles apart as the crow flies has so many sinuosities that the ground covered by the survey would be several times the straight line distance from point to point. The 12-years undertaking involved up to five months a year in the field, with the remainder of the time spent in the studio or office reducing the photographic evidence and field notes to definitive maps.

A legal description of the boundary had been established many years previously, prior even to Confederation, by an Act of the British Parliament. It is found in the Act of 1866 uniting the crown colonies of Vancouver Island and British Columbia, the centenary of which event the province recently celebrated in colorful ceremony. The territorial limits of British Columbia are defined as follows:

"7. Until the Union, British Columbia shall comprehend all such territories within the dominion of Her Majesty as are bounded on the south by the territories of the United States of America, to the west by the Pacific Ocean and the frontier of the Russian territories in North America, to the north by the 60th parallel of north latitude, and to the east by the Rocky Mountains and the 120th meridian of west longitude. . . ."

"8. After the Union, British Columbia shall comprise all the territories and islands aforesaid and Vancouver Island. . . ."

In the light of later knowledge some of that language is extraordinarily vague, as Canadians found to their cost in its reference, for instance, to "the frontier of Russian territories." However, the Act's easy assumption that it had settled the boundary between British Columbia and the rest of Canada by its reference to the vast wilderness of the Rocky Mountains appears to have given rise to no difficulty until shortly subsequent to the creation of the Province of Alberta in 1905.

But when coal mining was commenced in the Crow's Nest Pass, there developed legal doubts about which province had licencing and regulatory jurisdiction. The provincial administrations were also uncertain where in several of the much travelled passes their respective responsibilities began and ended in such important matters as road building and policing.

Accordingly the three governments of Canada, Alberta and British Columbia entered into negotiations to clarify the situation. Firstly they agreed that "between the international boundary (of the United States) and the 120th degree of longitude the interprovincial boundary is the line dividing the waters flowing into the Pacific from those flowing elsewhere." In short, the boundary was to be the watershed.

That simple word "elsewhere," covers a lot of territory. Some of the waters in question flow into the Arctic via the Mackenzie, some into Hudson Bay through the Saskatchewan, others to the Gulf of Mexico by way of the Missouri and Mississippi.

Following agreement on the watershed line the next step was the appointment of a three-man boundary survey commission, charged with the task of locating the physical boundary on the ground, marking it clearly, and recording it on definitive maps. Members of the Commission were Messrs. J. M. Wallace for Canada, R. W. Cautley for Alberta, and Arthur O. Wheeler for British Columbia.

Responsibility for defining their task, which in the first instance covered only that portion of the boundary between the United States and the 120th meridian, was nominally assigned to the three surveyors-general, but was in fact, by mutual ument, largely carried out by Dr. Deville, who issued the written instructions.

Mr. Cautley was entrused with surveying the principal passes, which work he carried out by normal procedure of transit and chain.

Mr. Wallace was merely to visit the operations occasionally so that he could assure the federal government that the work was being carried out correctly. (In the event, he withdrew from participation after the first year or two, when the federal responsibility was assigned to Mr. Cautley, since the interests of Alberta and Ottawa were identical.)

Pertinent to this narrative is the following sentence in the instructions:

"Mr. A. O. Wheeler shall be in charge of the topographical survey and the establishment of survey monuments on the peaks adjacent to the passes . . ."

Selection of Mr. Wheeler for this, the roughest and undoubtedly most difficult part of the undertaking, was influenced by the fact that he had already distinguished himself in such work through his survey of the Selkirk Range in 1901 and 1902. The results of that survey he recorded in a volume published by the department of the interior and entitled The Selkirk Range, British Columbia. Additionally Mr. Wheeler's taste for mountaineering had led him to help found the Alpine Club of Canada, of which for many years he was the director.

Most important was that in the Selkirk survey Mr. Wheeler had acquired valuable experience in the phototopographical technique which it was found desirable to employ in the boundary survey.

In crude mileage the distance covered by Mr. Cautley's party in the passes would probably amount for about five per cent of the aggregate length of the boundary line between the 120th meridian and the U.S. border. But, since it is in the passes that the traffic exists, it was here that every foot of the line had to be precisely marked on the ground as well as recorded on maps. (This is probably the place to mention that when the mountain survey was completed Mr. Cautley went on to locate the boundary along the 120th meridian through the scrub timber and the plains to the north.)

To carry out the formidable task of mapping the wilderness of mountain peaks assigned to Commissioner Wheeler that gentleman engaged the services of a former associate and business partner, Alan J. Campbell.

Mr. Campbell was born and reared in an Ontario town and after graduating in engineering at University of Toronto qualified as a Dominion land surveyor in 1909. He moved west to serve with Mr. Wheeler, topographer for the department of the interior, at Calgary. Although topographical surveying was the function for which the office was established, Frank Oliver, minister of the department at the time, had other ideas that he regarded as of greater value. He wanted more and ever more land laid out for agricultural settlement. Messrs. Wheeler and Campbell dutifully completed several land classification maps under this regime, but since that kind of work did not greatly interest Mr. Wheeler he resigned and set up his own private firm of Wheeler, Campbell and McCoy. Shortly afterwards for personal reasons he moved his home to Sidney, where his illustrious father-in-law, the late Professor John Macoun, the noted botanist credited with introducing the growing of wheat to the Canadian prairies, continued his researched in semi-retirement.

Mr. Campbell took his B.C. land surveyor examination in 1912 and has lived in the coastal province ever since. His appointment to carry out the field work under Commissioner Wheeler's portion of the boundary survey occurred simultaneously with the move to British Columbia.

For Mr. Wheeler and his fellow members of the Alpine Club of Canada, as for thousands of young and athletically-minded men and women throughout the world, mountain climbing is a thrilling sport. When Alan Campbell was assigned to the boundary survey he confessed that he had never been on a mountain in his life.

"In my first year or so," he recalled recently, "whenever I climbed a high mountain I was mortally afraid I'd never be able to get down."

Colleagues have said since that today Canada possesses no more expert mountaineer than Alan Campbell and that nobody knows the Rocky Mountains better than he. Although to him mountain climbing is not and never has been a sport, he has always enjoyed the life, which yields him the kind of satisfaction that work well done brings to all skilled craftsmen and professionals. If evidence be needed that only highly competent mountaineers could carry out the duties he undertook it is to be found in the following excerpt from Page 15 of Volume 1 of the three-volume report presented by the Boundary

Typical cairn along border

Commission and published by the department of the interior.

"The work . . . is carried on by climbing to previously selected stations at the summits of the peaks, or to high points on mountain ridges that command a view of the area to be mapped. From these a series of views is taken and their direction established by the use of the transit theodolite, FREQUENTLY ENTAILING A PRECARIOUS BALANCING OVER DIZZY DEPTHS. Rock cairns are erected at the selected stations either in advance or at the time they are occupied, and are used for identification purposes . . .

"The chief advantage of the method is its rapidity for work in the field. It is much more rapid than any other than can be applied to the same class of country and the standard of accuracy is a high one . . . Only a small party, generally a surveyor and one or two assistants, is required to carry instruments, take the views, record the transit readings and build the rock cairns or other signals that may be erected to mark the stations it is desired to perpetuate. THE INSTRUMENTAL OUTFIT, ADAPTED BY DR. DEVILLE, WEIGHS ABOUT 45 POUNDS AND IS SO DISPOSED AS TO BE EASILY CARRIED EVEN WHEN THE CLIMBING IS DANGEROUS."

The caps are mine and are not found in the laconic official report.

Mr. Campbell says he acquired his first knowledge of mountaineering science from a celebrated so-called "Swiss" guide, Conrad Kain, who was actually a native of the Austrian Tyrol. His exploits in several countries formed the theme for a book Where the Clouds Can Go, by the late J. Monroe Thorington. Kain was engaged by the Boundary Survey Commission and in their first season he demonstrated mountain climbing techniques and lectured about them until, as Mr. Campbell says, "he removed the fear."

Another valued member of the Wheeler-Campbell party in 1913 was a prairie farmer named Brinkman, whose hobby was collecting varieties of mosses. As early as 1911 he assisted in a survey of what is now Tweedsmuir Park and on several occasions was employed by the Alpine Club of Canada to set up camp sites for the annual climbs. Always he discovered new varieties of mosses for his fine collection.

Hugh Boyd, well known as an agricultural reporter on the Winnipeg Free Press and later as a radio commentator on similar topics, worked with the survey party for several seasons in the 1922 to 1924 area.

Also retired and living a few blocks from the Campbell residence in Victoria is Alan Stuart (Spike) Thomson, a brilliant draftsman who worked in the field with Mr. Campbell for several seasons, then moved to Sidney where he produced most of the several hundred detail maps recording the boundary location. The relief map of the Banff area admired by thousands of visitors in the CPR station at Banff was his handiwork.

Although, broadly speaking, the survey was begun in the south and progressed northward, the work did not consist of a direct march from one limit to the other. According to Mr. Campbell his first year's work was from the Kicking Horse Pass southward to Mount Assiniboine. In 1914 and 1915 the survey proceeded from the Crow's Nest Pass to the United States border. In 1916, which he recalled as the best year for photography encountered throughout the entire 12 seasons, he worked north from the Crow's Nest Pass until the line was linked up with the Mt. Assiniboine program of earlier years.

Following this the Campbell party progressed northwest from the Kicking Horse, while the Cautley party operated in Yellowhead Pass. The several years until 1921 were employed in completing the work between the Yellowhead and the Kicking Horse, Mr. Campbell operating sometimes from one direction, sometimes from the other.

Throughout this area Mr. Campbell said that it was necessary to gain access to the boundary region from the Alberta side, as the slopes upward from the Columbia are extremely steep. But when the undertaking entered the region north of the Athabaska River the surveyors criss-crossed the height of land a dozen or more times a season in pursuit of the easiest route to the summit.

Of the 21 passes mapped by the Cautley party the most northerly was Robson. All passes to the north of Robson were left to the topographical crew. Among the instructions issued to the commission was that every monument and every cairn must be visible from the next in line. This stipulation was met by the Campbell party erecting its cairns on the peaks of the mountains.

In 1965, on a nostalgic return visit by helicopter to several of the highest points in Robson Pass Mr. Campbell found that cairns he had erected more than 50 years previously were standing unimpaired and as clearly discernible as on the day they were set up.

Some idea of the amount of mountain climbing involved in the 12-year survey is conveyed by the fact that approximately 400 of these cairns were built at the average rate of 30 a season. In the passes Mr. Cautley was able to use cement in erecting monuments bearing brass plates, one facing in each direction to indicate which side was Alberta and which British Columbia. Conveying such materials to the mountain tops was not practicable, but loose rock was usually readily available for cairn construction.

At the end of each season Commissioners Wheeler and Cautley, who frequently accompanied their assistants in the field for short periods to check the operations, met to go over the work carried out by the two teams of surveyors. It is a tribute to their objective integrity and to the efficiency of the field work that in only one case was there a definite conflict of opinion between the representatives of the two provinces. That difference arose in Phillips Pass, a part of the Crow's Nest region, surveyed in the second year. Final settlement of the difference was not effected until more than 10 years later at the conclusion of the entire project.

The point at issue is worth describing, as it illustrates the major field in which the commissioners and their assistants, when unable to find clear cut evidence of the watershed, had to exercise discretion.

At the summit of Phillips Pass is a small lake, about 100 yards wide. It has no visible outlet. All to the east is Alberta and to the west British Columbia, but the absence of evidence as to which way the lake drains led to a difference of opinion between the two commissioners. Mr. Wheeler observed that the east shore of the lake rose to a higher level than that to the west. He contended in such circumstances the only possible outlet was to the west. Mr. Cautley, on the other hand, detected what might have been a spring well down the mountain side below the lake. The water from this spring flowed into an eastbound stream. Mr. Cautley contended that this was no spring, but the actual outlet of the lake. A proposed color test was for some reason not undertaken. Instead the 10-year disagreement was resolved by adopting the judgment of Solomon. The lake was divided in half, boundary monuments were erected on each shore so that the line cuts across the waist of the lake. This solution, the commissioners frankly conceded in their report, was simply a compromise. Still it has served to this day without incident.

The greatest difficulty in determining the exact line of the watershed was encountered in the swampy muskeg with which the mountain passes abound. It was an agreed principle, embodied in the instructions, that the conditions actually prevailing at the time of the survey should govern, even in the face of evidence that in earlier years or other seasons the flow of water might have been in a different direction.

It was this hard and fast rule that led to the rather surprising inclusion entirely within British

GRAPEFRUIT PEEL TULIPS

By EDITH BAGLO

At breakfast one morning, while preparing a half grapefruit for my drink of juice, I tried to think of an invention or something new in flower-making. Suddenly I found myself staring at my grapefruit.

Why not try peel flowers? I thought. I began work on a whole grapefruit and these tulips are the result. Really I should not give away my invention secret but here goes:

Cut fruit in half. Each half makes one flower. Or if a bigger bloom is preferred, cut off a piece two inches or less from top, stem end of grapefruit. With sharp knife or scissors cut around edge and scoop out insides, being careful not to pierce outer peel. A teaspoon or dessert spoon makes a good scooper. The white inside skin will peel off nicely, pulling the fruit sections with it. Leave only a thin layer of the underskin to protect outer peel. Then with an awl or scissors make a hole through peel at the top for insertion of the flower-centre.

Measure for petals and mark with pen or crayon. Cut petals to within one inch from bottom hole and shape with scissors.

Fasten prepared tulip centre onto thick wire to form stem and cover wire with florist's tape. Insert stem through hole and pull down slowly until centre is in position. Crease tissue paper into a ball and stuff into peel tulip to hold its shape while drying. Hang upside down by twisted stem-end on a nail in a warm room to dry.

Twice a day examine "flower" to straighten any petal that might be twisting out of shape. Once the peel is bone dry it is impossible to change the shape.

On second day of drying, sometimes longer if the room is damp, remove the tissue and let dry thoroughly a week before applying paint. Red or yellow tulips are the prettiest I think. Use a small one-inch-wide soft brush and a good enamel paint or a spray paint. Hang tulip again to dry paint.

PEEL TULIPS with pot of dried "silver dollars."

Cut tulip leaves from green velour and wire them to hold shape. Fasten short stems of leaves onto tulip stem with green tape. Place tulips in vase to match or make your own arrangement.

HE CLIMBED EVERY MOUNTAIN

Columbia of the whole of Mount Robson, known to be the highest peak in the Canadian Rockies. The report conceded that with the periodic advances and recessions of the glaciers the watershed could change from time to time. What the Boundary Commission was instructed to do was to record the situation as it actually existed on the surface at the time of the survey. So despite the great altitude of Mount Robson, the Commission had no alternative, on the evidence as found by the surveyors in 1922 and 1924 but to establish the line to the northeast of this lofty peak. From all slopes the drainage was seen to head towards the Fraser River and the Pacific.

It may disappoint others, as it did me, to learn from the Commissioners' report that this great mountain was not, as popular legend has it, named after one or other of the two illustrious Robson brothers who made a major contribution to the early development of British Columbia.

One, John Robson, was premier; the other Ebenezer, is revered as a pioneer missionary. Although it was no special responsibility of the Boundary Commission to investigate the matter, they saw fit in their report to quote the reliable authority of H. J. Moberly that the mountain was named for the foreman of a hunting party long prior to the days in which the statesman and his missionary brother were sufficiently eminent to be so recognized.

Two illustrations of the problem of determining the location of the watershed in muskeg country may be given, one as described to the writer by Mr. Campbell, the other quoted from the official report.

At Fortress Lake, about 50 miles south of Jasper, the generally northwest-southeast direction of the boundary is broken by a deep bay projecting westward. Here Mr. Campbell encountered an unusual phenomenon in that Chuba River, which flows north to the Athabaska on the Alberta side, is higher than the nearby lake to the west, so that a short and easily opened channel would divert the whole of Chuba River into Fortress Lake, thus placing the entire river basin, a tract of substantial area, in British Columbia. The assumption that some such channel had existed in the not too distant past was almost irresistible, but Mr. Campbell said the commission was bound by its instructions to deal with the situation as it was when the survey passed through. The boundary was drawn between lake and river and thus it remains.

The situation found at Carcajou Pass is graphically described in the report:

> "The pass is of a peculiar formation . . . the valley lies to the west of the Smoky, and is wide and thickly timbered for the first mile and a half of its course. The bottom then opens out in abroad morass where lie many ponds of water, several of considerable extent. Through this morass the stream divides into numerous channels, of which by far the greater number and volume flow northwesterly to form the headwaters of Holmes River, the lesser number flowing northerly to unite later in the bed of Carcajou Creek. Somewhere in this indefinite morass is the watershed, but as the whole is more or less under water, it is difficult to say where it lies. . . ."

A hint of what the survey involved in the matter of physical exertion is given in the statement that for mapping the Bess and Carcajou Passes nine camera stations were occupied as follows: "Chown Creek N. No. 1, at 7,582 feet; Chown Creek S. No. 2, at 7,917 feet; Chown E., 6,370 feet; Bess S.A.E., 8,219 feet; Bess S.W., 8,460 feet; Mt. Jessie, 8,702 feet; Carcajou Creek N., 7,273 feet; Wolverine Mt., 9,110 feet; Wolverine Shoulder, 8,405 feet."

The photographic aspects of the operation have their own interest. In those days use of film was not general and the views were recorded on 6½" by 4¾" glass plates. For the first couple of seasons these were taken to the office at Sidney for developing and printing. Later, however, the department made its facilities at Ottawa available and the plates went there for processing.

Of the thousands of plates exposed very few were lost or spoiled. One newly exposed lot had a narrow escape when the horse on which the plateholders were packed ran away to have a swim in a nearby lake. Nevertheless the plates were recovered, dried off and, although there were a few blemishes on the resultant prints, the data required for mapping purposes were still clearly visible.

Outdoor photography, of course, depends upon the weather. One summer the work was badly handicapped by forest fires. On another occasion —typical in its way—when Messrs. Wheeler and Campbell had toiled to an 11,000-foot peak near Laggan in bright sunshine, they were suddenly enveloped in quick-forming dense cloud for so long that Mr. Wheeler was about to abandon the attempt and leave the site for Mr. Campbell to assay on another day when just as suddenly the cloud moved away and the required photographs were obtained.

Where the 120th meridian cuts across the mountain range it was found advantageous to establish the exact point of contact by working south from the level plain until the divide was reached. Thence northward to the 60th parallel Commissioner Cautley's organization ran the straight boundary line along the meridian. Although the legal boundary was quite definitely established by law, knowledge of its exact location on the ground had to be ascertained and marked.

Although the Alberta-British Columbia boundary is likely to remain as the most extensive photo-topographical survey on record it is not the only undertaking of its kind in this mountainous province. Following completion of the boundary project Mr. Campbell entered the direct service of the British Columbia government as topographer, retiring a few years ago as chief of the division. Among numerous areas that he personally covered by photographic methods are the watershed serving the Greater Vancouver water district, the Coquitlam Lake area, Garibaldi Park and the territory around Mt. Sir Alexander Mackenzie.

Between 1941 and 1950 (by which time it will be realized Mr. Campbell was no longer a young man) he made a second survey of the British Columbia-Yukon border along the 60th parallel, running his line as high as 8,400 feet, mostly in bad weather.

One of the privileges that fell to him in the boundary and other surveys was that of naming sundry mountains and passes. In this he says he preferred to employ descriptive terms rather than commemorate the names of persons. Thus Mallard Lake and Mt. Isosceles call for no explanation.

It was on July 31, 1924, when the boundary survey was within weeks of completion that a deserved compliment was paid to Alan Campbell for his notable part in the undertaking. Arrangements were made by the several governments to unveil a memorial monument in Robson Pass, to commemorate the commission's achievement. Mr. Campbell, who had run the survey through this part of the boundary, was at the time far away at the northerly limits of his territory line when he received instructions to be present for this occasion.

Only a hurried and rough journey enabled him to arrive in the park just in time to learn to his gratified surprise that the honor of unveiling the monument had been conferred upon Mrs. Campbell, who had been brought to the site for the occasion. In addition to the members of the Alpine Club who (perhaps not entirely by accident, since Mr. Wheeler was their director) were holding their annual encampment in the vicinity, the occasion was graced by official representatives of the three governments concerned.

The official report presented to the government by the commission on completion of their work records that the selection of Mrs. Campbell to perform this ceremony was "a tribute to the excellent work done by her husband in the survey of the boundary."

At the head of a flight of cement steps leading to the beach a marker commemorates George Holland, Hudson's Bay trader for whom the Point was named, and farther inland, nearer Dallas Road a tiny granite marker reminds us of Bertha Whitney who died of smallpox here in 1872.

My curiosity is aroused. What is known of George Holland, Bertha Whitney and the house where she died? At the provincial archives old newspapers tell a grim story of a wandering seaman, dread sickness and murder.

As to why George Holland, who came to North America in 1838 as an able seaman on the Beaver had a geographical feature named for him I can find no good reason, except, perhaps a shortage of names for the countless features that had to be christened on the maps.

Nothing is known of Holland's life before he joined the Hudson's Bay Company in London. Since he became a schoolmaster at Fort Vancouver in 1839 he must have had more education than the average seaman of that day. On the other hand, it does not indicate that he was necessarily well-educated. The company schools were desperate for anyone who could teach a minimum of the three R's. And no wonder; Holland was paid £6 a year for his services.

However, Holland still drew his seaman's wages of £24 per annum, and since food and lodging were provided, he could spend his wages as he pleased, if indeed he could find anything to please him in the meager stocks at the Fort.

Four years later Holland became postmaster at Fort Langley. He should have been happy, for here was a prestige position paying £40 a year, but Holland must have been one of those individuals who is always somewhat dissatisfied. In 1846 he wandered on to Fort Victoria. Less than a year later he applied to the board of management of the western department of the company for permission to retire from its services. He said that the climate of southern Vancouver Island didn't agree with him.

On landing at London in May, 1848, he immediately set about securing a master mariner's certificate. By September he applied to the Hudson's Bay Company for reappointment to its services.

Reluctant to hire him, the company told Holland there was no vacancy, and not likely to be.

In October, 1849, George Holland stepped aboard the immigration ship Norman Morison as first mate. Once again he sailed past the point that had been named for him the previous year when Capt. Henry Kellet's chart of Victoria had been published. On that May day Holland Point was green with new grass and young leaves. The sailor forgot that Victoria's climate had disagreed with him; the young Fort looked good to him.

After a coasting trip to Fort Simpson and Sitka along the northern B.C. coast, Holland returned to England. Although it was only late September when they docked the trip had been a stormy one as far as Holland and the captain were concerned. Dr. Helmcken, who was a passenger said: "Holland was not much of a sailor or anything else — he and the captian being so different did not get on well together."

Holland again wrote the company and this time asked to resign from the Norman Morison and be assigned to another ship. His resignation was accepted, but he didn't get another ship.

Undaunted, Holland then asked for an appointment in the last services of the Company, Fort Victoria or elsewhere. The Company replied that his services were not required. And that is the last that was heard of George Holland.

Meanwhile, at Holland Point George Nias built a house and barn on what had once been Hudson's Bay's Beckley Farm property. Later he tried to pre-empt the land, but apparently was not successful.

George Nias was away, his house vacant when the mail ship Prince Alfred hove-to off Victoria. Residents, anxiously awaiting her arrival, crowded to the waterfront that fine June day in 1872 and then drew back, whispering, and hastened home. She was flying the dreaded yellow flag that meant pestilence.

Victoria's health officer boarded the ship, examined the passengers and crew, then sent little Bertha Whitney to the Nias house on Holland Point with her family to nurse her. The remainder of the passengers were to go quarantine at Macaulay Point for nine days. Unhappy with the proposed confinement and the delay it would cause them, the passengers hissed the officer and pelted him with potatoes, undoubtably old ones.

The city officials pitched navy tents for the quarantined passengers, and built a cook house. They bought new mattresses, pillows and blankets at the city's expense. Special constables were hired to guard the ship and the pesthouse at Holland Point. A house at Constance Point was readied for the women and children.

Meanwhile the Prince Alfred was fumigated and all the infected bedding and blankets were weighted with irons and thrown overboard. Within a few days worried citizens claimed that local Indians had beachcombed the blankets. The reports were denied, but no one really knew if the disease-carrying bedding had broken loose from the irons and floated or not.

Relieved to have escaped a major outbreak, the Prince Alfred's captain breathed easy for the first time since Bertha Whitney had come down with smallpox three days out of San Francisco. He upped anchor and sailed for Nanaimo.

But the Prince Alfred's troubles were not over. At Nanaimo, her second mate came down with the smallpox. Shortly afterward, Mr. Hall, the under steward showed signs of infection. Horrified, some of the passengers left the Prince Alfred and took passage on the Emma. Nanaimo city officials ordered the pest ship to leave port. Apparently no one cared where she went as long as she left.

Once again the Prince Alfred was at Victoria with the yellow flag hoisted. Health officials removed the two sick men to the Nias house at Holland Point. Bertha Whitney had died two days before, and had been buried in a grove of trees between the house and the sea.

This time the ship's crew were strictly quarantined for 21 days. Unpleasant rumors circulated that some of them broke quarantine by sending ashore letters to mail and clothes to the laundry. When the Emma came in, the passengers who had fled the Prince Alfred were met and conducted to quarantine. Passengers on the steamer Maude who had visited the Prince Alfred in Nanaimo were also sent to the quarantine camp. Victoria residents thronged to the city medical offices for vaccine.

Apparently this ended the smallpox scare; there is no further mention of new cases connected with the Prince Alfred. What became of the two victims who went to the pest house isn't clear, but oldtimers spoke years later of at least a second grave at Holland Point beside Bertha Whitney's.

The Nias house stood vacant, forlorn, shunned by most Victorians. The wide doors of the stable swung open, and shut with the winds that blew over the Point. It was a desolate spot when a well-dressed Scottish gentleman known only as P. Stocker arrived in Victoria in November, 1872, five months after the smallpox scare.

Mr. Stocker took a room at the Angel Hotel. He was a strange man, very reserved and quiet-spoken. He never referred to his past life, except once to inquire about the possibility of renting a house to live in. He said he expected his wife to join him soon.

A practical joker directed Stocker to the Holland Point pest house. Since the smallpox victims were fresh in everyone's minds, Stocker must soon have learned the truth about the house, but he didn't seem to care. In fact, he appeared to have grown quite fond of it, and he was seen going there often.

Once Stocker was seen on a lonely street, struggling with a woman, a stranger in town. Shortly afterward a woman of the same description disappeared, leaving a suitcase in her rented room. There was nothing to show who she was or to give any clue as to where she had gone. Stocker was not questioned, and indeed no one suspected him of her murder until much later.

A few days after the woman's disappearance, a passer-by idly wondered what was behind the closed doors of the pesthouse stable. He found out, but it wasn't anything he might have expected. It was a dead man.

The police found that the man had been shot in the head, and might have been strangled as well. In the pockets of his rough workman's pants was a key.

Four days later, Mr. Morton, manager of the Angel Hotel, having noticed that his boarder, P. Stocker was not around, called at the morgue. He was right: the dead man was Stocker, but the clothes were not his. The key unlocked a

THOUGHT FOR FOOD

The next time you're stuck on what's for dinner . . . reach for a can of salmon.

Although salmon is caught in other than British Columbian waters, we like to think that our own beautiful fish is the best in the world . . . and it is too.

Our most fascinating natural resource is a sensitive, short-lived creature of great strength, mysterious in its ways and hidden from us through most of its life. To thousands of British Columbians it is a source of their livelihood. To many it provides a superior quarry for their sport, a spirited fish of prodigious power and wily intelligence. Salmon is an older species than man. Down through the centuries salmon has sustained man through famine and feast. In the early days of British Columbia its unfailing appearance in the rivers each summer and fall made it a staple in the diet of our first settlers.

With dipnet and pointed shaft, Indian fishermen crouched on ledges over glassy resting pools where salmon lingered before continuing their upstream odyssey.

Salmon became a commercial product in the early 1800s, when the Hudson's Bay Company dominated the industry. In 1835 the company shipped almost 4,000 barrels of salt cured salmon to Hawaii and Asia.

There was of course a thriving local market.

The salmon business came of age with the development of canning in 1866. The first man in British Columbia to can salmon with reasonable success was James Syme, who in 1867, boiled salmon in cans on top of an ordinary range and exhibited the results at the New Westminster Agricultural Fair that same year.

This year as we celebrate British Columbia's Centenary we might well say Happy Birthday to the canned salmon industry.

There are so many good reasons for making fish a staple of your family's diet that it is hard to find an excuse for the homemaker who "just never thinks of it or the mother who says "but the children won't eat fish."

Chances are, a good recipe can convert non fish-eaters to fish fanciers. And it's so easy to stock your cupboard with canned salmon where it's always available when you need a menu-brighter. One of these is . . .

PRIZE PACIFIC PIE ..... One, one-pound can salmon (2 cups), 3 tbsp. flour, 1 egg well beaten, 1 5-ounce can chopped ripe olives(about 2-3 cup), 2-3 cup chili sauce, 1⅓ cups sifted all purpose flour, 2½ tsp. baking powder, ¾ tsp. salt, 5 Tbsp. shortening, 2-3 cup yellow cornmeal 1 cup milk, and ¾ cup shredded cheddar cheese. Preheat oven to 425 degrees F. Lightly grease a 9-inch pie plate. Drain and flake salmon, reserving the liquid. Carefully blend salmon liquid into 3 tbsp. flour, then blend with beaten egg. Add chopped ripe olives, chili sauce, the ¾ tsp. salt and if you like extra zip add a shake of Tabasco. Mix well then lightly fold in the flaked salmon. Let stand while preparing the crust. Measure sifted flour, resift with baking powder and salt. Cut in shortening finely. Lightly mix in cornmeal. Make well in centre and add milk all at once. Mix very lightly with a fork just until all ingredients are moistened. Do not knead or roll out, the dough is quite soft. Just dump it into the pie plate and with the back of a wooden spoon spread dough over bottom and sides of plate to the top edge. Pour the salmon mixture into centre, spread to edges of dough. Sprinkle cheese on top. Bake in the preheated oven 25 minutes to 30 minutes or until crust is lightly brown and filling fairly firm. Makes six servings.

If the children are not fond of olives these may be omitted. Besides being a fine main dish for dinner this makes a delightful snack, a sort of seafood pizza for teenage party or sting affair. It is tasty too if served cold or if made ahead it reheats well in a hot oven, wrapped in foil.

Before continuing with more recipes let me tell you about the high and amazing nutritive value of salmon. Salmon is a complete protein food. As high in nourishment content as meat or poultry, cheese and eggs. It is rich in both vitamins and minerals. And canned salmon is not a luxury . . . as you can use the entire contents of the can . . . liquid, skin, bones and all. That is because every drop, every morsel is not only edible but nutritive value of salmon. Salmon is a valuable for its iodine and phosphorous, for its richness in vitamins A, B, and D.

Would you like to serve a novelty ?Well here into the pie plate and with the back of a wooden is an unusual dish, flavorful, economical and make-ahead. Make in the morning, bake later.

Always spark up the flavor of fish with lemon . . . they have an affinity for one another.

Lemon garnishes glamorize any fish dish. Cut in wedges. Cut in circles, then cut in interesting shapes with kitchen scissors.

Lemon for flavor . . . lemon for eye appeal. Adventure with lemons.

DEAR HELOISE:

We are a big family and buy our meat when it's on sale, to store in the freezer.

We have learned to cut off all the excess fat before storing our roasts, chops or any big cuts of meat. It takes up far less space in our freezer. And I tell my wife, "There is absolutely no need to use this valuable space for storing fat, when we can render it and put it in the refrigerator."

Another thing we learned is to buy a huge pork roast, cut it into chops when we get home, remove all the fat and pack the meat in meal-sized portions! This way, when we remove one bag from the freezer, it's not too much for the immediate meal.

Larry Smith

You are so right, Larry. Besides, I'm thinking that all that fat, when left on the meat to be frozen, slows up the freezing and thawing processes.

DEAR HELOISE:

Every time my mother makes me a dress to wear to school or Sunday school, she always gives me an 18" square of material and lets me ravel the edges out. This is what I wear over my head for a scarf.

Another thing it's good for is, if I tear my dress, Mother has a matching piece of material to mend it with.

Now, don't you think my mother is nice to think of this?

Drain ... a measuring cup and add enough milk to make ½ cup liquid. Beat liquid into eggs. In a mixing bowl combine bread crumbs and the flaked salmon. Add seasonings and the cooked vegetables. Stir in egg mixture. Pack the salmon mixture into the bread container. Place crust on top and press firmly into place. Melt remaining 2 Tbsp. butter. Place loaf on shallow baking sheet and brush sides and top with melted butter. If you wish you can flavor the butter with a little garlic. Bake in a preheated 350 degree F. oven for 50 to 60 minutes. Serve hot, cut in slices with a serrated knife. Serve with Sea Sauce and lemon wedges. Serves 4-5.

SEA SAUCE . . . 2 Tbsp. butter or margarine, 2 green onions chopped, ¼ tsp salt, dash pepper, ½ cup chicken stock or white wine and 1 cup sour cream. Melt butter in a skillet. Add green onions and saute for 5 minutes. Add seasoning stock or wine and bring to a boil. Boil until liquid is reduced one half. Reduce heat, carefully add sour cream, stir until heated through. Pour into bowl to serve.

For luncheon, what could be better than a fine salmon salad? So easy to prepare. Have the salmon well chilled then simply flake it with a fork and pile in a lettuce-lined bowl. Top with lemon wedges and mayonnaise. Press hard-cooked egg through a sieve to garnish top. Sliced tomatoes and large ripe olives are a fine go-with. Serve hot crispy rolls or French bread. To start this meal I would suggest hot seasoned tomato juice served in mugs and for a dessert Apple Dumplings.

APPLE DUMPLINGS . . . 2 cups all-purpose flour, ½ tsp salt, 4 tsp baking powder, 4 to 5 tbsp shortening and approximately ¾ cup milk. You will need 6 not too large apples, peeled and cored, ½ cup brown sugar and ½ tsp cinnamon. Syrup . . . 1 cup brown sugar, 1 cup water, 2 Tbsp. butter 1 Tbsp. lemon juice and a dashof salt. Cut the shortening into the sifted dry ingredients. Add the milk to make a soft biscuit dough. On a lightly-floured board pat out the dough to ¼-inch thickness. Cut in 6 squares. Place peeled and cored apple in each square. Fill cavities with the sugar-cinnamon mixture. Draw dough up around apples. Pierce with a fork. Place on shallow baking dish. Pour the made-up syrup around apples. Bake in a preheated 350-deg. F. oven for about 40 minutes. Serve with pouring cream.

LIBRARY BOOK BAG

DEAR HELOISE:

I made a carrying (or shopping) bag from scraps of nylon net to carry my library books to and from the library. (The bag can be made any size—to fit individual needs).

I pinked the edges, and sewed the two sides together firmly. I padded the handles with strips of felt to keep them from cutting my hands.

The bags can be made in one, or a combination of colors. Since they are made of net, they are lightweight and can be folded and tucked away in your purse when not in use. They would make lovely gifts for any occasion.

And when you finish reading a book, you can put it back in the bag so that all the books will be in one place when you are ready to return them to the library.

These bags are absolutely wonderful for groceries or shopping.

DEAR HELOISE:

Tubular legs on kitchen chairs have a tendency (after being used awhile) to leave dark slide marks on floors.

I cut small squares of moleskin and attach them to the bottom of chair and table legs. Now we have easy-sliding chairs, and no more dark marks on the floors.

BRITISH COLUMBIA MOVED QUICKLY INTO CANADA

Confederation Spirit Swept Over Land

But many people in Ottawa thought British Columbia too far away, too American in outlook and destined to become part of United States

By James K. Nesbitt

The Confederation resolution was safely through the legislative council at New Westminster, and Father of Confederation Alexander Tilloch Galt was on the side of British Columbians who wanted to join Canada. It was early 1867 when Amor de Cosmos went off to the east to beg people there to realize the value of this united crown colony as part of the new Canada—the Kingdom of Canada it was first called, but when the Americans didn't like that term it was changed to Dominion.

De Cosmos was so sure British Columbia would get nowhere outside Canada that he paid his own expenses east, so that he might speak to The Reform Convention in Toronto.

The Toronto Globe reported what he said: "I cannot claim that this warm reception is due to any particular merits of my own. I believe that it must be considered as mainly a compliment to the colony from which I come.

"But there is another thing, I believe, which has inspired the people of Canada to receive an humble individual from British Columbia in the manner in which you have received me. The great Confederation spirit is sweeping over the land and the people of Canada, and they wish to consolidate all British America, from the United States boundary to the North Pole, and from Newfoundland to Vancouver Island.

"And they wish to build up through this great territory a people of one race, one language, one feeling, who shall exert their due influence on the continent of North America.

"I hope we will ere long be able to boast that we have a road through British territory not only to the Atlantic, but to the Pacific and Arctic Oceans.

"I ask—are British Americans less enterprising, less daring than their American cousins?

"If the people of the United States can govern a territory on the Pacific Ocean, why cannot 4,000,000 British Americans do the same thing?

"In the name of British Columbia, I ask you, the Reformers of Upper Canada to use your influence in order that British Columbia may be admitted to the Confederacy."

Back home in British Columbia, de Cosmos' old political enemy, John Robson, seemed to be sitting on the fence. There were those who said he was talking out of both sides of his mouth at once. He had said, in the legislative council, that he like the confederation-with-Canada idea, but to take it very slowly.

Robson, of course, used his newspaper in New Westminster, The British Columbian, to state his case: "We have been accused of recently assuming an attitude hostile to Confederation. This is a mistake. We give way to no man in a sincere desire to see this, our adopted colony, included in the confederation as soon as that most ardently-to-be desired change can be consummated with mutual advantage.

"Sooner than that we do not wish for it. Depend upon it, Canada won't take us in to her own disadvantage; no true patriot would wish to humiliate British Columbia by accepting disadvantageous terms. No. We have not assumed a hostile attitude, but have simply been trying to look the difficulties fair and square in the face, and promote a free and honest discussion of a measure which it is most desirable all should understand.

"A star of promise has arisen in the east. A nation, a British nation has been born, and is even now stretching its hand over the Rocky Mountains to welcome us into the new family circle—it is undoubtedly to that new relationship that we must look for ultimate rest and permanent well-being.

"We should deem ourselves unworthy of the name of Canadian were we found willing to rush this, our adopted colony into a premature, unfair, and unprofitable alliance even with Canada."

In the east, there was considerable opposition to taking in British Columbia, which many people in Ottawa thought too far away, too American in outlook, and destined to become part of the United States anyway, and so why bother with it?

The Kingston Whig Standard saw it quite differently: "It may be that Great Britain has woefully neglected her possessions in the Pacific.

"Possibly British statesmen have not kept pace with the rapid progress of development going on in the American settlements, and not having ambition to extend the empire among the islands and coasts of the Pacific Ocean. They have neglected to improve the naval station on Vancouver Island to the extent of which it is capable.

"But it is not to be inferred so readily—in fact it is not to be inferred at all—that a mere diplomatic pow-wow will induce the British government to give up to the insatiable Americans its possessions of British Columbia and Vancouver Island.

"These possessions are not erected into a colony; and under physical limits they are masters of their own destiny.

"The people of those colonies, now united, have already pronounced for union with the Dominion of Canada, and the natural order of things, as is now being worked out under the plan of confederation, is for the entire stretch of British territory, from the Atlantic to the Pacific, to form one chain of united colonies, with objects and aspirations distinct from those which animate the people of the United States.

"Confederation has in reality, given the death blow to annexation, and the sooner the Americans perceive the fact the sooner will they cease to waste their patience in expecting the Pacific colony to be absorbed into the American union.

"But this agitation for the absorption of British Columbia, strengthened by the Russian acquisition, inculcates the speedy performance of a duty by Canadians. Clearly it will become the parliament of the Dominion to facilitate as rapidly as possible the admission of British Columbia into the confederation.

"Temporary obstacles, as the difficulty of communication, must be overlooked. The expense of a railway to the Pacific, soon to be undertaken, must be looked steadily in the face.

"Our parliamentary representatives must rise to the dignity of statesmen, and conceive boldly and brave manfully all that is necessary for the expanse of the new nationality . . ."

On Confederation Day, July 1, 1867, The Colonist had a notable editorial, which has now become part of our cherished history:

"The birth of a new nation—our prospects as a member—this will be a memorable day for British North America—the Dominion of Canada, which is destined eventually to play an important part in the world's history, will be inaugurated by the formation of a ministry comprised of some of the best and greatest minds on the continent, who have been selected to officer the bark that is being launched upon the troublous waters of political life.

"We have reason to believe the proposal to include this colony in the Confederacy will be laid at a very early day, with every prospect of success, notwithstanding the predictions of a few in our midst who maintain that the Confederacy will not take over a bankrupt colony like ours, assume our debt, and guarantee our civil list, except we consent to become part and parcel of the Confederacy on terms that will be humiliating and destructive to us."

Courage, that's what was needed, advised The Colonist: "We entertain no such fears, knowing as well we do that to deprive the Confederacy of British Columbia would be to destroy the hopes of Messrs. Macdonald, Cartier, Tilley, Tupper and other prominent Confederationists.

"The loss of British Columbia to the Confederacy would be irreparable—the corner-stone of the great edifice would be removed and the whole structure would tumble to the ground for want of a secure foundation.

"This colony stands in the same position towards the Confederacy as the provinces of Nova Scotia and New Brunswick.

"They guard the eastern entrance to the rich eastern treasures of the confederacy. British Columbia stands like a sentry on the western portals, to look after the interests of one-half of the Dominion.

"Without a front on the Pacific, the confederation scheme would never have been mooted, and were the Imperial Government to cede or sell this colony to the Americans the whole concern of Canada would not require much time to follow."

There it was—the great political discussion of the first half of 1867. British Columbia was moving quickly into Canada, though the final stroke of the pen did not bring it about until July 20 of 1871.

Just the same the speed was remarkable, considering the momentous events, the controversial issues.

British Columbia is the sixth province of Canada. Manitoba, in 1870, followed Quebec, Ontario, Nova Scotia and New Brunswick—the four which formed the first union, July 1, 1867, the centenary of which we start to celebrate today.

Alberta and Saskatchewan became provinces in 1905, and Newfoundland not until 1949.

All hail to British Columbia, the Canadian bastion on the shores of the Pacific.

Grim Tales of Holland Point

trunk in Stocker's room. Inside was a suicide note instructing Morton to take care of the dead man's effects.

The possibility of foul play being ruled out, the police turned their attention to the missing gun and rough clothes on Stocker's body. They reasoned that the gun and Stocker's own clothes must have been stolen by Indians.

Therefore, when a Bella Coola Indian offered a small revolver for sale, he was picked up. It was Stocker's weapon, and he also had Stocker's blood-stained clothes. The case was closed, but it was whispered that Stocker's reason for suicide might have been guilt. After all, no one knew who the strange woman was he had struggled with. Had he killed her?

The only man who knew the answers was dead, and soon forgotten. The Colonist advocated the burning of the Nias house to prevent the spreading of disease. What did become of the old home I don't know, but it probably fell into disrepair and was torn down.

Meanwhile Holland Point slowly developed into the pleasant park it is today, the grim tales of its past recalled only by a granite marker hidden in the wild grass.

It was at this forest dugout in the Bulkley Valley, back in 1939, that Provincial Const. Tate (in picture) arrested mad recluse Sigurd Jussila for murder of a rancher near Houston, B.C.

STRANGEST CHARACTERS LIVE AT THE BACK OF BEYOND

ANOTHER
B.C. POLICE STORY
By CECIL CLARK

Generations of old-time policemen and game wardens have come up with stories of some old recluse they found far off the beaten track; maybe a trapper whose partner had quit him years before, or someone once well connected who abandoned family connections and social position to get away from it all. Occasionally there was a hint that the lonely bush dweller had fled from the law, usually in the United States. These were the type consistently evasive about their birth place or previous employment. Many of these characters living alone, existing off the country, ended their Crusoe existence in mental breakdown. It was then the police would hear of some mysterious character robbing food caches or waving strangers on their way with the business end of a Winchester. "Bushed" was the comprehensive term you applied to them.

One of the real old-time provincial policemen that we all knew and respected was Bob Pritchard, who died in Vancouver a couple of years ago. He had been retired for years, and on one occasion before his death I remember him telling me of an incident that happened in the early 20s when he was stationed at Sicamous. In those days there were few roads and fewer trails, so he covered the 600-mile shoreline of Sicamous Lake by boat.

It was after one severe winter that a trapper reported to Const. Pritchard that his "neighbor" hadn't been seen in months, so he figured he might be dead. The man referred to, Pritchard discovered, was a Polish Jew who lived alone high on a bench above the lake and miles from human contact. Those who had spoken to him claimed he had once been an expert fur cutter who had abandoned his trade and taken to the wilds. Once or twice in the past representatives of large fur firms at Edmonton and Vancouver had sought him out, trying to persuade him to go back to work. No matter what salary they offered he wouldn't budge.

Pritchard sailed up the lake (no gasoline power in those days) and arriving at the spot, hauled his boat up on the sandy beach and looked around. No tracks of anybody coming or going to the lakeshore for water, so his man must be sick. Then when he took the trail uphill to the cabin and noticed it criss-crossed with fallen trees, he figured he might have a corpse on his hands.

The cabin, like the bush around it, was silent; and the door, he found, was barricaded on the inside. He gave a few resounding raps, then picked up a piece of wood to try and force it open. Suddenly he heard a voice from within demanding: "Who's there?"

Alive to the ritual in these cases, Pritchard stepped smartly back for there was good chance, as often happened, that the screwball occupant would cut loose with a rifle or shotgun. Then in a loud voice he cried: "A friend. Open the door."

After a pause, came a fumbling at the door, slowly it creaked open and Pritchard viewed the strangest apparition he had ever set eyes on. The cabin's occupant was old and stooped, with a dirty unkempt beard that stretched down over his chest, to match equally matted hair that hung over his shoulders. From a cadaverous, ashen face burned two red-rimmed eyes, and a hand like a talon beckoned the policeman in.

"His clothing," Pritchard told me, "was a sort of a night shirt, made out of feed bags, patched and re-patched."

As it turned out the old fellow was rather timid about strangers, being a frail and inoffensive type. Pritchard made it clear that he only visited him to see if he was well and had enough to eat. The old man relieved his worry by showing him a couple of sacks of flour, and a case of canned milk.

Pritchard asked him what he had been doing with himself all winter and the old boy answered: "Meditating."

"And what else have you been living on?" asked the policeman.

"Potash," was the astonishing reply. Bob never did fathom this statement. He left him to his meditations.

On another occasion, Bob Pritchard told me, it was up at the head of Anstey Arm on Shuswap Lake that he ran across another mysterious character, this time a Russian and a real man of mystery.

Seems that a couple of years before Pritchard took over the detachment, a trapper called French Louie had complained of this character encroaching on his trap line. In those days trap lines weren't registered in the trapper's name, and even the existing regulations were a bit sketchy. Which led to frequent disputes, an occasional fight, even murder.

It was with the coming of spring and the lake clear of ice that someone noticed French Louie wasn't around.

Someone more interested than the rest passed the word to the policeman at Skamaus who made an investigation and came up with nothing. French Louie had just vanished.

A couple of years later when Pritchard took over he too heard the trap line gossip about Louie's disappearance. Trouble was, no one seemed to know where Louie's cabin had been located, and in addition there was no trail and no blaze marks.

INSP. LES JEEVES
. . . found bush recluse

Then one day a forest ranger complained to Pritchard about the mysterious Russian, who had approached the ranger's beach camp one morning armed with a rifle, seated himself on a log and silently eyed the forestry man's every movement. The ranger tried to engage him in conversation but he remained silent and watchful.

It was a day or two after hearing this that Pritchard went up the lake by boat, to land close to the Russian's cabin. There was no chance of landing unobserved for the cabin was built on a little promontory that gave its occupant a 180 degree view for miles around.

Pritchard was cooking a meal on the beach when the big bearded Russian appeared, a Winchester nestled in his arm. Pritchard tried his hand at conversation but it was clear the silent stranger didn't understand a word he was saying. Finally, however, by signs scratched in the sand and a sketch or two in his notebook, Pritchard made it clear he wanted to see his trapping licence. Came a smile of recognition and the stranger pointed to his cabin. It was there.

As he headed for the cabin, Bob Pritchard was right at his heels; he wanted to get a look inside that cabin. To see if it contained anything belonging to French Louie.

Curious to relate the interior of the cabin was a model of neatness, the table scrubbed white, the floor swept and even the pans seemed to have been polished before they were hung on the wall. Among the many evidences of comfort and good taste was a well stocked library of foreign language publications, curtains on the windows, pictures on the walls and the cupboards held a better than average stock of grub. The Russian showed his licence, then produced a number of valuable pelts. Pritchard noted a neat job of the skinning. At the back of the cabin were a couple of canoes, made from a single cedar log, remarkable for their lightness and perfect balance.

It was a week later that Pritchard, along with an Indian, made another trip into the area equipped this time with ropes and grappling irons. If the cabin betrayed no trace of Louie, then perhaps the lake might.

They dragged for days and found nothing, then turned their attention to the brush country around Hunakwa Lake. Fly bitten and discouraged they found not a trace to Louie.

However, Pritchard continued to keep a discreet tab on the Russian in the months that followed. He visited the outside about four times a year, paddling all night and sleeping ashore in the day time. Salmon Arm was his usual destination, where he sold his furs and bought his provisions, cutting a queer figure in his Cossack style fur hat and knee high Russian boots. He never tried to make friends with anyone, and no one ever got a hint of his past.

There was one story that went the rounds, probably pure hypothesis, that he had been exiled by the Czar to north eastern Siberia, from where he had escaped to cross Bering Strait and make his way from Alaska to south central B.C.

As can be imagined the mysterious Russian eventually fell into the category of the "bushed," when his actions became distinctly strange. Rounded up by the police he was committed to Essondale. There he died, taking the secret of his past to the grave with him.

It was Victoria-born Leslie Jeeves (who retired as an RCMP inspector last year) who once tossed me the next "bush recluse" story. Les was stationed at Cranbrook in his early day Provincial Police career, and it was from that point that he journeyed out one day to visit an old Scotsman who lived alone near Ta Ta Creek. Not only visit him, but bring him into Cranbrook for mental observation.

Seems the old boy got a meagre living out of a mere of one-man mine he ran near his cabin, his only companion an aged horse that he used to haul a stone boat to bring out ore.

The cabin was empty when Jeeves arrived as he headed down the trail to the mine. Then when he heard voices, he recognized it was the old man talking to his horse, and rounding a bend in the trail, saw an astonishing sight. The old man was hauling the stone boat with leather traces over his shoulders, and the horse was looking on!

When Jeeves introduced himself, the old boy explained that the horse was too old to haul the load, so he just brought him along for company.

As they talked Jeeves quickly got the message that though the old man was friendly enough, not only had he lost his marbles but he was apparently in very poor health.

In sympathetic style, Jeeves eventually got him to lock up his cabin, leave his horse with a neighbor, and accompany him back to Cranbrook. There, a couple of doctors had no compunction in booking him through to the funny farm. Just by chance Jeeves got the job of escorting him to New Westminster.

Up to this time Jeeves had typed him as "trustable but screwy;" a situation that continued until the train made a stop and among the passengers was a Chinese, who took a seat near the policeman and his charge.

As soon as the old man's eyes fell on the Chinese he gave one screech and promptly fell on him. Jeeves had to exert all the well-known Jeeves' brawn to separate the pair before the unoffending Chinaman got strangeld. Apparently this was the hidden bug bear; the trigger that set the old man off. The struggle ended, the old recluse finished his journey in the baggage car — in a strait jacket!

"Bushed" if you remember, is the word applied in these cases.

there is now another Walter Walker at the helm and I believe a third generation of Walkers is now with the firm.

In the normal course of events we should now meet the firm of McPherson and Fullerton, the real estate men, but as I have briefly mentioned these gentlemen previously and as I am compiling a short biography of the life of Thomas Shanks McPherson for publication at a later date this reference will suffice for now.

We are hurrying a bit just now to get across Yates Street where there is real "pay dirt" but this should not be done until we have stopped for a moment to meet Robert Hemington Swinerton, of the firm of Swinerton and Oddy, real estate and insurance agents. This gentleman was born in Ireland and I was always disappointed when talking to this fine man that he didn't explode as the Irish were reputed to do. No, he was a keen disappointment indeed. Such a pleasant man, quiet but very friendly. In later years when I had some business with him I found no reason to change my opinion, he was indeed a quiet Irishman.

He arrived in Victoria about 1885 and, as so many men who were successful in their business lives, he got his start with the Robert Ward and Co. The urge to be one's own boss was strong within him and he left the firm in 1889 to go into the real estate business. Just when he formed his partnership with Mr. Oddy is not clear, neither do I remember Mr. Oddy.

Mr. Swinerton very quickly obtained the confidence of the public and was soon representing some of the important investors of the city as well as overseas clients. With a slight impediment in his speech, he spoke slowly and expressed himself very clearly.

Later the firm of Swinerton and Oddy was dissolved and he then formed a new firm under the name of Swinerton and Musgrave, the partner being a descendant of the former Lieutenant-Governor Musgrave.

Mr. Swinerton died at a ripe old age in 1946 but his name still flies from the masthead of one of the leading firms of the city.

Just before we end this visit you might like to meet Mr. Gass, another real estate man. The only thing I can actually remember about him was the position of his home in the Dardanelles of Fort Street. The sightseeing conductors always drew attention to the home as the "only home fully operated by Gass." That's a joke, son!

Strolling Through London

Reviewed by
E. D. WARD-HARRIS

This elegant book about London, the greatest of all cities (as a Londoner born and bred I am unashamedly biased) is not a guide book.

If you want to know about the Tower of London or the Changing of the Guard, or anything else on the tourist route, you must look elsewhere.

London: Flower of Cities All, consists of a series of gentle strolls in company with a man whose knowledge of the complex history and many moods of London is as profound as his love for it.

There are 100 different Londons and Richard Church, poet and novelist, has managed to weld them into one enthralling fabric.

His companion on his walks is the Hungarian artist Imre Hofbauer. His paintings are arresting, his drawings superb.

Usually in a book of this kind one is apt to "look at the pictures" and more or less relegate the text to second place. But in this book the text is the thing and the drawings a magnificent bonus.

This puzzled me until I discovered the reason. Every great city has a gender: London is masculine, Paris feminine, and New York neuter. Church is always aware of London's sex whereas Hofbauer mistakenly sees it as feminine.

Robert Church, who is now quite elderly (he knew Victorian London), has poured into this book his considerable knowledge of literature, music, architecture and, above all, history.

His method is to take the reader with him as he wanders about the city, pointing out this and that, reminiscing, enlightening, savoring, dipping into history, and venting his spleen against the spoliation of beauty by the barbaric personalities of modern buildings.

With quiet humor, great erudition and an Edwardian-flavored prose style of immense strength and charm, Robert Church takes us to the very heart and soul of the great metropolis — which, to this day is really a sprawling cluster of villages.

Try as he will to make his way in print from A to B, Church constantly allows himself to be sidetracked by some interesting thought. A publishing house reminds him of Byron and, changing direction, off we go to Byron's house to relive an anecdote.

These trains of thought lead us all over town, then the apologetic author hops on a bus and returns us to Charing Cross where we start out again with the best intentions, only to have the whole thing recur.

It's delightful because it is precisely what happens to any knowledgeable Londoner proudly showing off his city to a visitor.

I thought I knew my native city well but Robert Church gives to London a new dimension.

Hofbauer's drawings alone are worth the price of this volume; with Church's text it becomes an incredible bargain.

All-Female Enterprise

Reviewed by
E. D. WARD-HARRIS

Apart from the poet Milton, who supplied the title, The Clear Spirit is an all-female enterprise.

Sponsored by the Canadian Federation of University Women as a centennial project, and edited by a woman, The Clear Spirit consists of condensed biographies of 20 famous Canadian women, each written by a different woman.

This feminism is so pointed and all-pervasive that a male reviewer almost feels guilty of voyeurism.

The book was a good idea but, alas, it is yet another centennial contribution that hasn't come off.

● Too much has been attempted: packing 20 subjects into one small book has resulted in a series of potted biographies which can satisfy neither writers nor readers.

● The attempt to provide something for everybody by allowing regionalism to dictate choice of subject matter was a cardinal error and is self-defeating.

● Two of the biographies in the English edition are printed in French which is carrying bi-culturalism to absurd lengths.

THE CLEAR SPIRIT — Twenty Canadian Women and Their Times, edited by Mary Quayle Innis; University of Toronto Press; 301 pages; $6.

● In the piece on Mazo de la Roche the writer confesses to obtaining new material from Ronald Hambleton — whose authorized biography of Miss de la Roche reached me by the same mail as The Clear Spirit!

● The piece on E. Cora Hind, the crop analyst — the most uniquely Canadian of them all — is by Kennethe Haig and is merely a condensation of her own biography of Miss Hind.

● Almost all the subjects have been dealt with more fully and more satisfactorily elsewhere, in many instances by the same writers.

● All the women dealt with, even the politicians, are treated with the reverence usually reserved for symbolic figures like Joan of Arc and Edith Cavell, the writers having overlooked that wise Milton pointed out that the clear spirit soars because fame is the spur.

Young People's Books Inform and Entertain

By CHARLES PAUL MAY
Author of High-Noon Rocket, Veterinarians and Their Patients, A Second Book of Canadian Animals.

For laughs, Dorothy Stephenson has written How to Scare a Lion (Ryerson, $3.95), illustrated by John E. Johnson. When a circus lion named Leonard gets hiccups, Fearless Frederick the lion tamer becomes frightened and sets out to find a cure. It is Leonard who solves the problem, after several funny incidents have occurred.

An amusing book for picture-book youngsters too small to read, The Oh Ball (Fitzhenry & Whiteside, $2.95) by Gertrude Espenschied has but one word. A prince and his dog find a magic ball that gives them joy and gets them into trouble until they learn how to control it.

The humor in Arnold Spilka's Once Upon a Horse (Oxford, $4.30) will make youngsters of four to eight aware that verse need not be stiff and formal. The author-artist deals with snoring hippos, city boys, whistles, and other intriguing subjects, and provides simple pictures as amusing as the rhymes they illustrate.

By illustrating beautiful phrases from various religions and peoples, Ezra Jack Keats produces a gem with God Is in the Mountain (Holt, $4.00). It is listed for all ages, while the format seems particularly good for ages five to ten. It will stand with the artist's other best sellers for its interpretative beauty.

Handsome animal photographs give a special appeal to When Summer Comes (Copp Clark, $3.85) by Charles Philip Fox. A narrator asks questions of his readers and answers some of them. Others he leaves for youngsters of six to nine to answer themselves. Through the book runs a thread of plot as the narrator tries to learn the answer to a secret.

Beautifully written and handsomely illustrated, Rakoto and the Dronge Bird (Ambassador, $5.50) by Robin McKown, illustrated by Robert Quackenbush, brings an exciting legend of old Madagascar to readers of six to ten. Village life is pleasant for Rakoto until other youngsters anger him by pestering the drongo bird that settles near them. After bird and boy save the village from slave traders, all is well again, and the author and artist make the tale vividly real.

All city readers of seven to 10 will envy Jon and Vestri as they learn about farm life and dog raising in Meindert DeJong's Puppy Summer (Fitzhenry & Whiteside, $4.95), illustrated by Anita Lobel. Fishing, hunting for arrowheads, and sleeping in the hay are all fun, yet they can't outweigh the adventure of having three pups.

A particularly funny book for ages eight to 11, Alvin Fernald, Foreign Trader (Holt, $4.00) by Clifford B. Hicks, illustrated by Bill Sokol, takes three youngsters on madcap adventures through Europe. Alvin wins a prize for a candy recipe and ends by outwitting would-be kidnappers and thieves. Many zany touches should appeal to reluctant readers.

Though too young to have a real car, Tommy Ranier gets a midget speedster in Roderick Huff's The Blue Racer (Clarke, Irwin, $4.25), illustrated by Leonard Shortall. It proves to be more trouble than he expected, as dogs chase it and thieves make off with it. Readers of eight to twelve will nevertheless wish they were Tommy, even when he comes in second instead of first in the big race.

Thirteen great players, such as Stan Musial, Mickey Mantle, and Yogi Berra, are covered in Baseball's Most Valuable Players (Random, $2.75). The book concentrates on the seasons in which they won their awards, which is exactly what sports fans of ten and up will want.

Angry girls of 13 can get into plenty of trouble, as Robert Burch skillfully shows in Queenie Peavy (Macmillan, $4.25), illustrated by Jerry Lazare. Queenie throws rocks at anything, especially when taunted about her father's being in jail. After he comes home, she pretends everything has changed, including herself, and discovers a more enjoyable way of life.

Teen-age girls are waiting for books like Foster Pups (Nelson, $4.25) by Virginia McDonnell. A true account of how high-school students pioneered in pre-training guide dogs for blind children, it tells a lot about dogs and young people. Written almost as a novel, with one boy as focal character, it will fascinate reluctant as well as capable readers.

Teen-agers should be proud to read of the part Canadians played in the Second World War, and can get part of the story in From Casablanca to Berlin (Random, $2.75) by Bruce Bliven, Jr. The book is illustrated with good photographs that show men in action more than gory details.

Rob de Soren finds life in the New World far more difficult than he had imagined. As the central figure of Theodora Herapath's teen-age novel Journey into Danger (Longmans, $3.50), illustrated by William Wheeler, he faces the perils of a Quebec winter and a trip to Fort Toronto with untrustworthy companions. The author, once a resident of British Columbia, now lives in Ontario.

Quebec Story Muddied By Emotion

Reviewed by
E. D. WARD-HARRIS

Because the subject is important and because the writing is muddled by emotion, I read My Country, Canada or Quebec? twice before attempting to review it.

Solange Chaput Rolland is a journalist, broadcaster and lecturer. Armed with great fortitude, and a Centennial Commission grant, she set forth from Quebec to visit all English-speaking provinces of Canada to ascertain peoples' feelings towards La Belle Province.

It proved to be a journey of anguish.

She sums it up in the last paragraph of the book:

"I have come back to my land, ma Terre-Quebec, more Quebecoise than Canadienne, because I have learned harshly, with pain and anguish, that to remain true to my past, to my culture, to my language, and to the very French individual that I have become, I must live in Quebec, in a Quebec that one day may yet become my country."

On the same page she talks of a country divided into 10 republics and says she has failed to find a common denominator between French and English Canadians.

How shocking that this deeply sensitive and transparently honest writer should feel impelled to make such statements 100 years after Confederation.

It is true that Canada is Balkanized, that each "republic" has imperatives, and that the country lacks identity, a national soul. But is not Quebec itself the greatest stumbling-block?

The sincere Madame Rolland traversed Canada begging her questions, imploring in effect, "love me, love my Quebec." Inevitably she was shattered by her reception.

She talked to politicians, journalists, university professors and occasionally to strangers in trains, hotels and restaurants. Her direct questions, often oddly phrased, must have been embarrassing.

To Walter Shaw, premier of Prince Edward Island, who asked Madame Rolland why she was visiting his province, she replied: "To find out, Mr. Premier, if your island is ready to make room for us in Confederation."

Everywhere she went, almost without exception, she found to her dismay that no one is falling over backwards to love Quebec. One may deplore this attitude, and I do, but Madame Rolland's gloomy, self-pitying approach can only fortify it.

She resents the insularity of the provinces and yet confesses that when she sings O Canada she thinks first of Quebec. It is painfully obvious that she thinks of Quebec first and foremost in all things.

She says she "tried to remain serene and objective" throughout her tour. I found little that was objective in her book, and her serenity in the face of constant unpalatable remarks must have been due as much to martyrdom as to good breeding.

Was her journey really necessary? Her reason for undertaking it proves that it wasn't. Apart from the language barrier, the cultural gap between French and English-speaking Canada is still too wide.

In Toronto, this asked Pierre Berton: "Why does English Canada hate us so much?"

Berton's gentle and thoughtful reply to this brutal question just about sums it all up.

"Because," he said, "we are afraid of the unknown, because you know what you are, and we don't, and because you have an identity and some of us are still looking for one."

This is widely sensed and salting wounds aggravates.

My Country, Canada or Quebec?, by Solange Chaput Rolland; Macmillan; 122 pages; $4.50 cloth, $2.50 paper.

which, of course, has a French edition, can only do harm. Madame Rolland, in all innocence, has served Canada ill.

I would suggest that before she ventures "abroad" again she should have a chat with Guy Beaulne, a compatriot and colleague in the Quebec Department of Cultural Affairs.

That great Quebec ambassador of goodwill will explain to her the secret of winning friends and influencing people, and how to be Canadian without forfeiting Quebec identity.

Campbell River Story Told In Locally Produced Book

DIAMOND IN THE ROUGH — A History of Campbell River, by Helen A. Mitchell, has now been published and is being distributed for sale locally at $5.95 per copy. (It may be obtained by out-of-town customers at $5.50 — $5.95 plus 30 cents sales tax plus 25 cents for packaging and postage.)

The Campbell River book is approximately 8x10 in. in size and contains 160 pages, including 70 photographs. It is a local product in more ways than one, having been written, illustrated, printed, and bound on Vancouver Island.

The Upper Islander, Campbell River, was the printer. The hard-cover binding is medium green with black lettering and is the hand work of one of the Hermits of St. John the Baptist, of Merville, B.C., the jacket design and illustrations are by Larry Dickison, cartoonist for the Upper Islander.

Mrs. Mitchell is a long-time resident of Campbell River. She was born in Aberdeen, Scotland, and came to the west coast of Canada as a young girl. She started writing 20 years ago, and has reported for several newspapers during that time, including the Campbell River Courier, Comox Argus, Comox District Free Press, Vancouver Sun, and The Daily Colonist, and has had one or two articles published in magazines. Mrs. Mitchell has been women's editor of the Upper Islander for the past three years, and also writes the column, Notes to You by Nellie.

Work on the History of Campbell River was started in August, 1963. It took many trips to Vancouver, Victoria, and Courtenay, doing research; dozens of visits to people and places of business; and hundreds of letters, seeking information, before the book was finished.

Tape Recorded Conversations Created Morley Book

Reviewed by E. D. WARD-HARRIS

ROBERT MORLEY, by Robert Morley and Sewell Stokes; Heinemann; 223 pages; $7.25.

This book is the result of a series of tape-recorded conversations between Sewell Stokes, author and playwright, and Robert Morley, actor.

Stokes' role was to ask questions in the style of an interviewer and to keep things more less in sequence.

A one-line question, for instance, will elicit pages of response. The trick is to get your victim to talk and then know when, and how, to divert the flow into a fresh channel of thought. The hardest task of all is editing the tape.

Sewell Stokes proves himself brilliant at this type of thing. His technique is not unlike that of Kenneth Harris in the London Observer—and there is no higher praise than that.

Unfortunately, Stokes has expended his polished effort on a worthless cause.

It is true that Robert Morley, an exceedingly large man with a matching ego, talks freely and honestly, and reveals all, but because he is of no importance his views are of faint interest.

We learn that Morley, like his father, is a compulsive gambler; that his hatred of schoolmasters (with some justification) is pathological; and that, although married and the father of three, his sexual tastes veer towards eroticism and voyeurism.

This posturing, petulant, vain, arrogant man (whose vanity and arrogance, one suspects, are a cover for a massive inferiority complex) has met and worked with some of the great directors, actors and actresses of his time, but these people have only walk-on parts in this book. Morley hates (or fears) to share the stage with them. It is all very tiresome.

Laurence Olivier once said: "Some actors go into the theatre for what they can get out of it, others for what they can put into it." Morley, a second-rate performer with a single expression, fits snugly into the first category.

What a pity Sewell Stokes didn't use his talent to do a book about Morley's mother-in-law, the great Gladys Cooper. Now there's someone of character who has achieved something.

Two More Buckskins

THE TROUBLE WITH JAMIE, by Lorrie McLaughlin; Macmillan; 96 pages; $1.95.

ESCAPE FROM GRAND PRE, by Frances O. Thompson; Macmillan; 112 pages; $1.95.

Books Number 12 and 13 have been added to Macmillan's Buckskin series of adventure books for young readers.

The Trouble With Jamie is the story of a young boy, Jamie, growing up in Liverpool, Nova Scotia, during the most exciting era in sailing history.

In 1800 Liverpool harbor was alive with new privateers bound for the Spanish Main to capture rich prizes in gold. Jamie became a stowaway on the finest of them all, the brig River, and his adventures can't but help thrill young readers.

Lorrie McLaughlin also wrote Buckskin Book Number 2, West to the Caribou.

Escape From Grand Pre is a tale of action and excitement, against a vivid and realistic background. It will hold the attention of every boy and girl.

Marie and Andre Melanson, and their grandfather, lived in a village of Grand Pre, Acadia, in the area that is now Nova Scotia. In 1755 England was an enemy of France, and when war came the French were exiled from Acadia to make room for English settlers. There were terrible punishments for those who defied the order to leave, but Andre's grandfather smuggled the boy into the hands of a friendly Indian tribe.

Andre lived with the Indians, but he often dreamed of returning to live at Grande Pre with his grandfather.

The story is a fascinating tale of his escape, of his years with the Indians, and of his return.

BIGHORN SHEEP

Goodbye, Old Friends

Story by BARNEY McKINLEY
Pictures by Jim Ryan

A lot of steady-eyed old friends are going to be lost when the provincial museum moves to its new multi-million-dollar quarters.

Due for oblivion are a number of quaint old stuffed animals that have provided education and interest for generations of museum-goers from Victoria and outside points.

Their frozen postures and glassy-eyed stares, unaltered for 50 or 60 years have long been a feature of the museum's displays. But their days are numbered now. There probably just won't be any place for them in the new museum building, the province's centennial project.

Announcement of the awarding of a $3,985,000 contract for completion of the towering new building, across Government Street, from the east wing of the legislative buildings where the museum has long been housed, marks the end of an era.

One of the museum veterans that is certain to find a long-delayed last resting place is the big moose that has stood on his wooden platform on the main floor of the museum for decades. A prime example, in his solid stance, of the old-time taxidermist's art, the old moose is a mangy relic now. Generations of visitors have plucked at his hide until his papier mache skin shows through in patches.

His bell, the long beard-like appendage under his throat, has been pretty well yanked out. His noble moose nose is slightly awry and his glass eyes seem to have dulled over the years.

Fate of the white Kermode bear family that has long stood in its glass cage is also uncertain. If the Kermodes fail to make the move to the fancy new building a big chunk of history will be lost.

Members of a sub-species named for the museum's second curator, Francis Kermode, and found only on a few west coast islands, the Kermode family has been on display since about 1905 after falling prey to collectors on Gribble and Princess Royal Islands in 1904.

Another old friend who may drop from sight is the single-horned specimen of the now-extinct Queen Charlotte Islands caribou. A creature that seems almost as mythical as the unicorn, old one horn is actually made up from parts of three specimen caribou collected by the museum in 1908. Apparently there was only one horn between the lot of them, so that's the way the count remains to this day.

A main factor in the fate of the museum's stuffed animals is the new emphasis on displaying specimens in natural surroundings. Once it was enough for children—and adults—to gaze at these strange woodland creatures frozen forever in a more or less stilted stance by the pioneer preserver. Now it seems that day is done.

And so the stuffed heads of moose and wapiti, the ancient raccoon family, the wolverine, the bighorn sheep and mountain goats will likely not be around much longer.

But perhaps there is still a way to save them. Perhaps curator Dr. Clifford Carl is half serious when he says: "What we need now is a museum of museum relics."

So there may yet be a few years of service left for Davidson's whale, old bull moose and the one-horned caribou, creatures out of time and soon now out of place.
